DIGEST OF PUBLIC LAW 89-117

HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1965.

Authorizes special provisions for disadvantaged persons, such as rent supplements; extends and expands Federal Housing Administration insurance operations; continues urban renewal programs; establishes uniform land acquisition procedures in connection with land acquired under eminent domain; extends college housing programs; authorizes grants to provide basic water facilities; and authorizes creation of open space recreation areas.

Authorizes the Farmers Home Administration to make loans to persons in any age group to buy previously occupied dwellings, farm service buildings, and adequate farm land.

Establishes a new loan program which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make and to insure loans for rural home improvement. Limits total amount of loans that can be made or insured in the low- and moderate- income bracket to a total of $300 million annually, but places no limit on the amount of loans for higher income people.

Defines a rural area for loan purposes as a place not associated with an urban area and having a population not in excess of 2,500, or a population between 2,500 and 5,500, if rural in character.

Increases from $10 million to $50 million the authorization for grants to provide low rent housing for domestic farm labor.

Extends authorizations for rural housing programs for four years, to Oct. 1969.

HOUSE

1. APPALACHIA. Continued debate on S. 3, to provide public works and economic development programs and the planning and coordination needed to assist in development of the Appalachian region. pp. 3819-51, 3882

Rejected the following amendments:

By Rep. Cramer, 65 to 152, which would have substituted the text of H.R. 4466, to extend the proposed program to other economically depressed areas throughout the U. S. pp. 3838-45

By Rep. Cramer, 66 to 118, to strike out a provision which he stated would give the Federal Cochairman of the Appalachian Regional Commission "an absolute veto over any program and over any project. pp. 3845-7

By Rep. Baldwin, to strike out provisions authorizing the construction of access roads in the area. pp. 3848-50

By Rep. Saylor, to increase from 70 to 90 percent Federal assistance for construction of highways in the area. p. 3851

2. HOUSING. Received the President's message on housing and urban development (H. Doc. 99) (pp. ~~3812-16~~) in which he called for establishment of a Department of Housing and Urban Development; proposed a program of matching grants to local governments for building new basic community facilities with an appropriation of $100 million for fiscal year 1966; and urged Congress "to continue, on a modified basis, the existing housing programs which have proven their ability to meet important needs." The message includes the following statement: "Nor can we forget that most of our programs are designed to help all the people, in every part of the country. We do not intend to forget or neglect those who live on the farms, in villages, and in small towns. Coordinated with the Department of Agriculture, the programs I have outlined above can do much to meet rural America's need for housing and the development of better communities."

Reps. Albert, Boggs, and others commended the message. pp. 3816-8, 3883-4

4. ELECTRIFICATION. Rep. Reifel commended the agreements worked out between REA cooperatives, municipal power users, and investor-owned power companies in S. Dak. recently "over the troublesome territorial integrity dispute," and inserted several items discussing the agreements. pp. 3877-8
5. COTTON. Rep. Findley inserted a letter he received from the president of the Lubbock Cotton Exchange critical of the present cotton program and stating that it "has brought about a decrease in cotton exports, an increase in Government cotton stocks and much added costs, and a reduction in the cotton farmers income." pp. 3874-5
6. APPROPRIATIONS. Received from the President proposed supplemental appropriations for pay act costs (H. Doc. 98) (p. 3890) which include proposals for this Department as shown on the attached table. This document includes proposed supplemental appropriations of $14,578,000. PROBLEMS AND FUTURE OF THE CENTRAL CITY AND
ITS SUBURBS

MESSAGE

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

RELATIVE TO

THE PROBLEMS AND FUTURE OF THE CENTRAL CITY AND ITS SUBURBS

MARCH 2, 1965.—Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

To the Congress of the United States:

Throughout man's history, the city¹ has been at the center of civilization. It is at the center of our own society.

Over 70 percent of our population—135 million Americans—live in urban areas. A half century from now 320 million of our 400 million Americans will live in such areas. And our largest cities will receive the greatest impact of growth.

Numbers alone do not make this an urban nation. Finance and culture, commerce and government make their home in the city and draw their vitality from it. Within the borders of our urban centers can be found the most impressive achievements of man's skill and the highest expressions of man's spirit, as well as the worst examples of degradation and cruelty and misery to be found in modern America.

The city is not an assembly of shops and buildings. It is not a collection of goods and services. It is a community for the enrichment of the life of man. It is a place for the satisfaction of man's most urgent needs and his highest aspirations. It is an instrument for the advance of civilization. Our task is to put the highest concerns of our people at the center of urban growth and activity. It is to create and preserve the sense of community with others which gives us significance and security, a sense of belonging and of sharing in the common life.

Aristotle said: "Men come together in cities in order to live. They remain together in order to live the good life."

The modern city can be the most ruthless enemy of the good life, or it can be its servant. The choice is up to this generation of Americans. For this is truly the time of decision for the American city.

In our time, two giant and dangerous forces are converging on our cities: the forces of growth and of decay.

Between today and the year 2000, more than 80 percent of our population increase will occur in urban areas. During the next 15 years, 30 million people will be added to our cities—equivalent to the combined population of New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Detroit, and Baltimore. Each year, in the coming generation, we will add the equivalent of 15 cities of 200,000 each.

Already old cities are tending to combine into huge clusters. The strip of land from southern New Hampshire to northern Virginia contains 21 percent of America's population in 1.8 percent of its areas. Along the west coast, the Great Lakes, and the Gulf of Mexico, other urban giants are merging and growing.

Our new city dwellers will need homes and schools and public services. By 1975 we will need over 2 million new homes a year. We will need schools for 10 million additional children, welfare and health facilities for 5 million more people over the age of 60, transportation facilities for the daily movement of 200 million people and more than 80 million automobiles.

In the remainder of this century—in less than 40 years—urban population will double, city land will double, and we will have to build in our cities as much as all that we have built since the first colonist arrived on these shores. It is as if we had 40 years to rebuild the entire urban United States.

Yet these new overwhelming pressures are being visited upon cities already in distress. We have over 9 million homes, most of them in cities, which are run down or deteriorating; over 4 million do not have running water or even plumbing. Many of our central cities are in need of major surgery to overcome decay. New suburban sprawl reaches out into the countryside, as the process of urbanization consumes a million acres a year. The old, the poor, the discriminated against are increasingly concentrated in central city ghettos; while others move to the suburbs leaving the central city to battle against immense odds.

Physical decay, from obsolescent schools to polluted water and air, helps breed social decay. It casts a pall of ugliness and despair on the spirits of the people. And this is reflected in rising crime rates, school dropouts, delinquency, and social disorganization.

Our cities are making a valiant effort to combat the mounting dangers to the good life. Between 1954 and 1963 per capita municipal tax revenues increased by 43 percent, and local government indebtedness increased by 119 percent. City officials with inadequate resources, limited authority, too few trained people, and often with too little public support, have, in many cases, waged a heroic battle to improve the life of the people they serve.

But we must do far more as a nation if we are to deal effectively with one of the most critical domestic problems of the United States.

Let us be clear about the core of this problem. The problem is people and the quality of the lives they lead. We want to build not just housing units, but neighborhoods; not just to construct schools, but to educate children; not just to raise income, but to create beauty and end the poisoning of our environment. We must extend the range of choices available to all our people so that all, and not just the fortunate, can have access to decent homes and schools, to recreation, and to culture. We must work to overcome the forces which divide our people and erode the vitality which comes from the partnership of those with diverse incomes and interests and backgrounds.

The problems of the city are problems of housing and education. They involve increasing employment and ending poverty. They call for beauty and nature, recreation, and an end to racial discrimination. They are, in large measure, the problems of American society itself. They call for a generosity of vision, a breadth of approach, a magnitude of effort which we have not yet brought to bear on the American city.

Whatever the scale of its programs, the Federal Government will only be able to do a small part of what is required. The vast bulk of resources and energy, of talent and toil, will have to come from State and local governments, private interests, and individual citizens. But the Federal Government does have a responsibility. It must help to meet the most urgent national needs; in housing, in education, in health, and in many other areas. It must also be sure that its efforts serve as a catalyst and as a lever to help and guide State and local governments toward meeting their problems.

We must also recognize that this message, and the program it proposes, does not fully meet the problems of the city. In part, this is because many other programs, such as those for education and health, are dealt with separately. But it is also because we do not have all the answers. In the last few years there has been an enormous growth of interest and knowledge and intellectual ferment. We need more thought and wisdom and knowledge as we painfully struggle to identify the ills, the dangers, and the cures for the American city. We need to reshape, at every level of government, our approach to problems which are often different than we thought and larger than we had imagined.

I want to begin that process today.

We begin with the awareness that the city, possessed of its own inexorable vitality, has ignored the classic jurisdictions of municipalities and counties and States. That organic unit we call the city spreads across the countryside, enveloping towns, building vast new suburbs destroying trees and streams. Access to suburbs has changed the character of the central city. The jobs and income of suburbanites may depend upon the opportunities for work and learning offered by the central city. Polluted air and water do not respect the jurisdictions of mayors and city councils, or even of Governors. Wealthy suburbs often form an enclave whereby the well-to-do and the talented can escape from the problems of their neighbors, thus impoverishing the ability of the city to deal with its problems.

The interests and needs of many of the communities which make up the modern city often seem to be in conflict. But they all have an overriding interest in improving the quality of life of their people.

And they have an overriding interest in enriching the quality of American civilization. These interests will only be served by looking at the metropolitan area as a whole, and planning and working for its development.

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

To give greater force and effectiveness to our effort in the cities I ask the Congress to establish a Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Our urban problems are of a scope and magnitude that demand representation at the highest level of government. The Housing and Home Finance Agency was created two decades ago. It has taken on many new programs. Others are proposed in this message. Much of our hopes for American progress will depend on the effectiveness with which these programs are carried forward. These problems are already in the front rank of national concern and interest. They deserve to be in the front rank of government as well.

The new Department will consist of all the present programs of HHFA. In addition it will be primarily responsible for Federal participation in metropolitan area thinking and planning. This new department will provide a focal point for thought and innovation and imagination about the problems of our cities. It will cooperate with other Federal agencies, including those responsible for programs providing essential education, health, employment, and social services. And it will work to strengthen the constructive relationships between Nation, State, and city—the creative federalism—which is essential to progress. This partnership will demand the leadership of mayors, Governors, and State legislatures.

INCENTIVES TO METROPOLITAN AREA COOPERATION

The Federal Government cannot, and should not, require the communities which make up a metropolitan area to cooperate against their wills in the solution of their problems. But we can offer incentives to metropolitan area planning and cooperation. We can help those who want to make the effort but lack the trained personnel and other necessary resources. And the new Department should have regional representatives in our metropolitan areas to assist, where assistance is requested, in the development of metropolitan area plans.

We already have Federal programs in which assistance depends upon the completion of soundly conceived metropolitan area plans, such as the mass transportation program passed by the 88th Congress. This program strikes at the heart of one of our most critical and urgent needs—a transportation system which can relieve congestion and make it possible for people to travel with comparative ease to places of work, learning, and pleasure.

I am proposing other programs which will also require sound, long-range development programs as a condition of Federal assistance. Wherever it can be done without leaving vital needs unmet, existing programs will also be keyed to planning requirements.

Among the most vital needs of our metropolitan areas is the requirement for basic community facilities—for water and sewerage. Many existing systems are obsolete or need major rehabilitation. And population growth will require a vastly increased effort in years ahead.

These basic facilities, by their very nature, require cooperation among adjacent communities. I propose a program of matching grants to local governments for building new basic community facilities with an appropriation of $100 million for fiscal 1966. These grants will be contingent upon comprehensive, areawide planning for future growth; and will be made only for projects consistent with such planning.

One of the greatest handicaps to sound programs for future needs is the difficulty of obtaining desirable land for public buildings and other facilities. As growth is foreseen it should be possible to acquire land in advance of its actual use. Thus, when the need arises, the land will be there. I recommend a Federal program for financial assistance to help in this advance acquisition of land. Federal grants would be made available to cover the interest charges for 5 years on loans obtained by public bodies. Thus we will cover the costs during the period before the facilities are constructed.

Last year alone 1 million acres were urbanized. As our cities spread, far too often we create the ugliness and waste which we call urban sprawl. At times we find we have built new slum areas in our suburbs. Some of our programs are designed to stem this tide by helping city governments to plan their growth. But we must continue to depend upon the private developer and lender for most of our construction. And they sometimes lack the economic resources to insure high standards of development. I therefore recommend a program of federally insured private loans, backed by Federal mortgage purchases where necessary, to finance the acquisition and development of land for entire new communities and planned subdivisions.

This program should enable us to help build better suburbs. And it will also make it easier to finance the construction of brandnew communities on the rim of the city. Often such communities can help break the pattern of central city ghettos by providing low- and moderate-income housing in suburban areas.

This program will be complemented with a program of Federal financial assistance to State land development agencies. Under this program public bodies would acquire land, install basic facilities, and then resell the improved land to private builders for the construction of suburbs or new communities.

All of these programs would be dependent upon the existence of areawide planning for growth to which the aided developments must conform. They are designed to stimulate the farsighted planning for future growth which is necessary if we are to prevent sprawl and new slums, and to create standards which will guarantee a decent environment for our future city dwellers, whatever their race or income. In addition, these programs should enable us to build better suburbs; since it will be possible to acquire land and improve it before the imminent approach of the city has sent costs skyrocketing upward.

RESOURCES FOR PLANNING

To plan for the growth and development of an entire metropolitan area takes a wide range of skills and a large number of trained people. These vital human resources are in short supply. They are beyond the command of many of our cities. To help meet this need I propose to establish an Institute of Urban Development as part of the new Department.

This Institute will help support training of local officials in a wide range of administrative and program skills. It will administer grants to States and cities for studies and the other basic work which are the foundation of long-term programs. And it will support research aimed especially at reducing the costs of building and home construction through the development of new technology.

TEMPORARY NATIONAL COMMISSION

Good planning for our metropolitan areas will take not only determination, the spirit of cooperation and added resources. It will also take knowledge, more knowledge than we have now. We need to study the structure of building codes across the country, their impact on housing costs, how building codes can be simplified and made more uniform, and how housing codes might be more effectively enforced to help eliminate slums.

Zoning regulations also affect both the cost and pattern of development. We must better learn how zoning can be made consistent with sound urban development.

Few factors have greater impact on cost, on land speculation, and on the ability of private enterprise to respond to the public interest, than local and Federal tax policies. These, too, must be examined to determine how they can best serve the public interest.

Finally, we must begin to develop better and more realistic standards for suburban development. Even where local authorities wish to prevent sprawl and blight, to preserve natural beauty, and insure decent, durable housing they find it difficult to know what standards should be expected of private builders. We must examine what kind of standards are both economically feasible and will provide livable suburbs.

To examine all these problems I recommend the establishment of a Temporary National Commission on Codes, Zoning, Taxation, and Development Standards. I predict that the body masked by such an unwieldy name may emerge with ideas and instruments for a revolutionary improvement in the quality of the American city.

This entire range of programs is designed to help us begin to think and act across historic boundaries to enrich the life of the people of our metropolitan areas. We do not believe such planning is a cure-all or a panacea. It can sometimes be a slender reed. It must be flexible and open to change, and we cannot wait for completed plans before trying to meet urgent needs in many areas. But it will teach us to think on a scale as large as the problem itself and act to prepare for the future as well as to repair the past.

I hope that, as time goes by, more and more of our Federal programs can be brought into harmony with metropolitan area programs. For in this approach lies one of our brightest hopes for the effective use of local, as well as Federal, resources in improving the American city.

THE PHYSICAL ENVIRONMENT

We owe the quality of American housing to the initiative and vitality of our private housing industry. It has provided the homes which have made most of our citizens the best housed people in the world. Our Federal housing programs are designed to work in support of private effort and to meet the critical needs which can only be met through government action.

After World War II we worked to revitalize the housing market and provide homes for a growing number of our people. This effort has been successful far beyond our initial hopes. However, the problem now has a different shape. It is not enough simply to build more and more units of housing. We must build neighborhoods and communities. This means combining construction with social services and community facilities. It means to build so that people can live in attractive surroundings sharing a strong sense of community.

To meet new objectives we must work to redirect, modernize, and streamline our housing programs. I will ask the Congress to begin the process this year, while continuing those programs which are providing necessary assistance.

We hope to achieve a large increase of homes for low- and moderate-income families—those in greatest need of assistance—through an array of old and new instruments designed to work together toward a single goal—

To insist on stricter enforcement of housing codes by communities receiving Federal aid, thus mounting an intensified attack on slums.

But such insistence is not realistic, and often not desirable, unless we can provide realistic alternatives to slum housing. We will do this by—providing rent supplements for families across a wide range of lower and moderate income brackets so they can afford decent housing.

providing rent supplement assistance to those forced out of their homes by code enforcement and all forms of federally assisted government action, from highways to urban renewal.

using both urban renewal funds and public housing funds to rehabilitate existing housing and make it available to low- and moderate-income families. There is no reason to tear down and rebuild if existing housing can be improved and made desirable.

emphasizing residential construction and rehabilitation on a neighborhoodwide scale in the urban renewal program.

These instruments, combined with existing public housing and direct loan programs, will greatly strengthen our existing effort. They should offer direct assistance to the housing of 1 million families over the next 4 years. Moreover they will immensely add to our flexibility in the process of building neighborhoods.

RENT SUPPLEMENTS

The most crucial new instrument in our effort to improve the American city is the rent supplement.

Up to now Government programs for low- and moderate-income families have concentrated on either direct financing of construction; or on making below-the-market-rate loans to private builders. We now propose to add to these programs through direct payment of a portion of the rent of needy individuals and families.

The homes themselves will be built by private builders, with Federal Housing Administration insurance, and, where necessary, mortgage purchases by the Federal National Mortgage Association. The major Federal assistance will be the rent supplement payment for each eligible family.

This approach has immense potential advantages over low-interest loan programs:

First, its flexibility will allow us to help people across a much broader range of income than has hitherto been possible. And it will therefore make it possible significantly to increase the supply of housing available to those of moderate income.

Second, the payment can be keyed to the income of the family. Those with lower incomes will receive a greater supplement. Under present direct loan programs the amount of the subsidy is the same for all who live in a federally assisted development regardless of individual need.

Third, the amount of assistance can be reduced as family income rises. It can be ended completely when income reaches an adequate level. Thus we will not end up, as is sometimes the case, helping those who no longer need help.

Fourth, it will be unnecessary to evict from their homes those whose income has risen above the point of need. This will eliminate what is often a great personal hardship.

Fifth, since the supplement is flexible it will permit us to encourage housing in which families of different incomes, and in different age groups, can live together. It will make it unnecessary for the Government to assist and even require the segregation by income level which detracts from the variety and quality of urban life.

In the long run this may prove the most effective instrument of our new housing policy. In order to give it a fair chance we are limiting it to carefully designed categories of need—in a program of rental and cooperative housing for those low and moderate income families displaced by Government action or now living in substandard housing. The subsidy will help them pay rent or meet payments on a federally insured mortgage.

in a program of homeownership for those displaced or living in substandard housing who display a capacity for increasing income and eventually owning their own home.

in a program to provide a broader range of housing for the elderly with inadequate incomes. The existing direct loan program for the elderly will continue at its existing level with the funds already provided by the Congress. I intend to insure a steadily increasing supply of federally assisted housing for older Americans.

On this basis our rent supplement program should finance more than 500,000 homes over the next 4 years, while improving our ability to make these homes serve the social needs of those who live in them. If it works as well as we expect, it should be possible to phase out most of our existing programs of low-interest loans.

REHABILITATION

We have concentrated almost all our past effort on building new units, when it is often possible to improve, rebuild, and rehabilitate existing homes with less cost and less human dislocation. Even some areas now classed as slums can be made decent places to live with intensive rehabilitation. In this way it may often be possible to meet our housing objectives without tearing people away from their familiar neighborhoods and friends. Sometimes the same objective can be achieved by helping local authorities to lease standard homes for low-rent families.

I recommend a change in the public housing formula so that we can more readily use public housing funds to acquire and rehabilitate existing dwellings—and to permit local authorities to lease standard housing for low-rent families. This will assist particularly in providing housing for large families.

I recommend the use of urban renewal funds to permit low-income homeowners to repair their homes and nonprofit sponsors to rehabilitate and operate homes for low-income families at rents they can afford.

I have recommended the appropriation of funds for low-interest rehabilitation loans under urban renewal, designed to help rescue our existing housing from blight and decay.

EXISTING PROGRAMS

I ask Congress to continue, on a modified basis, the existing housing programs which have proven their ability to meet important needs. But I also wish to state my intention to reduce or eliminate these programs whenever new and more flexible instruments have shown they can do a better job.

The public housing program should be continued with an authorization ample enough to permit an increase in the number of new units as well as to conduct a program of rehabilitation.

I ask the continuation, at the rate of 40,000 additional units for fiscal 1966, of the program of below-market interest rate mortgage purchases for housing for moderate income families. At the same time we must recognize that the benefits of this program are decreasing as the rising costs of Federal borrowing narrows the difference between the interest we ask and that demanded in the private market.

I urge continued support for our college housing program which is struggling to keep up with the needs of a rising volume of students.

I ask that our urban renewal program be increased to a level of $750 million a year by 1968. This program has done much to help our cities. But we have also learned, through hard experience, that there is more to eliminating slums and building neighborhoods than knocking down old buildings and putting up new ones.

Through using funds for rebuilding existing housing and by providing more and better assistance to families forced out by urban renewal, we can make this program better serve the people it is meant to help. We will continue to use urban renewal to help revitalize the business and industrial districts which are the economic base of the central city. But this program should be more and more concentrated on the development of residential areas so that all our tools—from the poverty program, to education and construction—can be used together to create meaningful and livable communities within the city.

To accomplish this purpose cities must develop long-range programs which take into account human as well as construction needs. Therefore I recommend that every city of 50,000 or larger develop a community renewal program as a condition of Federal help for urban renewal. These programs will provide an orderly schedule and pattern for development of areas of blight and decay—combining social and educational services with the planning of physical construction.

NEIGHBORHOOD FACILITIES

A community must offer added dimensions to the possibilities of daily life. It must meet the individual's most pressing needs and provide places for recreation and for meeting with neighbors. I therefore recommend a new program of matching grants to help local governments build multipurpose neighborhood centers for health and recreation and community activity. Related to our housing programs these centers can help urban renewal and public housing meet the goal of creating a meaningful community.

At the same time these centers must not be isolated expressions of interest. They should be part of an overall program for improving the life of people in disadvantaged areas. Therefore, I am recommending that in cities participating in the war against poverty these grants be made only when they are consistent with an approved community action program.

BEAUTIFYING THE CITY

In my message on natural beauty I pointed out that much of the effort of the new conservation would be directed toward the city. I recommend changes in the open space program, broadening its authority to help local governments acquire and clear areas to create small parks and squares, malls, and playgrounds. In addition I recommend special grants to cities for landscaping, the planting of trees, the improvement of city parks, and other measures to bring beauty and nature to the city dweller.

But beauty is not simply a matter of trees and parks. The attractiveness of our cities depends upon the design and architecture of buildings and blocks and entire urban neighborhoods. I intend to take further steps to insure that Federal construction does not contribute to drab and ugly architecture. But in this field, as in so many others, most of our hopes rest on the concern and work of local governments and private citizens.

CONCLUSION

This message can only deal with a fragment of the effort increasingly directed toward improving the quality of life in the American city. The creation of jobs, the war against poverty, support for education and health, programs for natural beauty and antipollution are all part of an effort to build the great cities which are at the foundation of our hopes for a Great Society.

Nor can we forget that most of our programs are designed to help all the people, in every part of the country. We do not intend to forget or neglect those who live on the farms, in villages, and in small towns. Coordinated with the Department of Agriculture, the programs I have outlined above can do much to meet rural America's need for housing and the development of better communities.

Many of these programs are intended to help the poor and those stripped of opportunity. But our goal is more ambitious than that. It is nothing less than to improve the quality of life for every American. In this quest the future of the American city will play the most vital role. There are a few whose affluence enables them to move through the city guarded and masked from the realities of the life around them.

But they are few indeed. For the rest of us the quality and condition of our lives is inexorably fixed by the nature of the community in which we live. Slums and ugliness, crime and congestion, growth and decay inevitably touch the life of all. Those who would like to enjoy the lovely parks of some of our great cities soon realize that neither wealth nor position fully protects them against the failures of society. Even among strangers, we are neighbors.

We are still only groping toward solution. The next decade should be a time of experimentation. Our cities will not settle into a drab uniformity directed from a single center. Each will choose its own course of development—whether it is to unite communities or build entirely new metropolitan areas. We will seek new ways to structure our suburbs and our transportation; new techniques for introducing beauty and improving homes. This is an effort which must command the most talented and trained of our people, and call upon administrators and officials to act with generosity of vision and spaciousness of imagination.

I believe today's proposals are an important start along that road. They should help us to look upon the city as it really is: a vast and myriad complex of homes and communities, people and their needs, hopes and frustrations. It can liberate the expectations of men, or it can crush them in body and spirit.

For underneath all the rest, at the very bottom of all we do, is the effort to protect, under the conditions of the modern world, values as old as this Nation and the civilization from which it comes. We work in our cities to satisfy our needs for shelter and work and the ability to command a satisfying way of life. We wish to create a city where men and women can feed the hunger of the spirit for beauty and have access to the best of man's work; where education and the richness of diversity expands our horizons and extends our expectations. But we also look for something more.

The American city should be a collection of communities where every member has a right to belong. It should be a place where every man feels safe on his streets and in the house of his friends. It should be a place where each individual's dignity and self-respect is strengthened by the respect and affection of his neighbors. It should be a place where each of us can find the satisfaction and warmth which comes only from being a member of the community of man. This is what man sought at the dawn of civilization. It is what we seek today.

2 ADVANTAGED PERSONS
3 FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO ENABLE CERTAIN PRIVATE
4 HOUSING TO BE AVAILABLE FOR LOWER INCOME FAM-
5 ILIES WHO ARE ELDERLY, HANDICAPPED, DISPLACED,
6 OR OCCUPANTS OF SUBSTANDARD HOUSING

7 SEC. 101. (a) AUTHORITY TO MAKE PAYMENTS.—
8 The Housing and Home Finance Administrator (herein-
9 after referred to as the “Administrator”) is hereby author-
10 ized to make, and contract to make, annual payments to a
11 “housing owner” on behalf of “qualified tenants”, as those 12 terms are defined herein, in such maximum amounts and 13 under such circumstances as are prescribed in, or pursuant 14 to, this section. In no case shall a contract provide for 15 such payments with respect to any housing for a period
16 exceeding forty years. The aggregate amount of the con-
17 tracts to make such payments shall not exceed amounts ap-
18 proved in appropriation Acts and shall not exceed $50,000,-
19 000 per annum prior to July 1, 1966, which maximum
20 dollar amount shall be increased by $50,000,000 on July 1
21 in each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968.

22 (b) HOUSING OWNER.—As used herein, a “housing
23 owner” shall mean a private nonprofit corporation or other
24 entity, a limited dividend corporation or other entity, or a 25 cooperative mortgagor under section 221(d)(3) of the

1 National Housing Act which, since the enactment of this
2 Act, has been approved for mortgage insurance thereunder
3 and has been approved for receiving the benefits of this
4 section: Provided, That no housing owner receiving pay-
5 ments under this section may receive the benefits of the inter-
6 est rate provided for in the proviso in clause (5) of section
7 221 (d) of that Act.

8 (c) QUALIFIED TENANT.—As used in this section, a
9 “qualified tenant” means any individual or family who has,
10 pursuant to criteria and procedures established by the Ad-
11 ministrator, been determined—

12 (1) to have an income below the amount required
13 to obtain standard privately owned housing in the area
14 that is conventionally financed or that is financed with 15 a market interest rate mortgage insured under said
16 section 221 (d) (3), but above the amount which would
17 be necessary for low-income families generally to obtain
18 admission to public housing dwellings, in the same or a
19 similar area, of a size comparable to the dwelling of the 20 housing owner which is occupied, or to be occupied,
21 by the qualified tenant; and

22 (2) to be one of the following—

23 (A) displaced by governmental action;

24 (B) sixty-two years of age or older in the case
25 of an individual or, in the case of a family, to have a

1 head who is, or whose spouse is, sixty-two years of
2 age or over;

3 (C) physically handicapped; or

4 (D) occupying substandard housing.

5 (d) AMOUNT OF PAYMENT.—The amount of the annual
6 payment with respect to any dwelling unit shall not exceed
7 (1) the amount by which the fair market rental for such
8 unit exceeds one-fifth (or one-fourth in the case of a unit to 9 be rented under a lease with an option to purchase the unit
10 or a cooperative ownership interest therein) of the tenant's
11 income as determined by the Administrator pursuant to pro-
12 cedures and regulations established by him, nor (2) the 13 estimated amount of subsidy contracted for under the United
14 States Housing Act of 1937 with respect to a dwelling unit
15 of comparable size and type in the same or a comparable
16 locality.

17 (e) CRITERIA AND PROCEDURES RELATING TO TENANT
18 ELIGIBILITY, RENTAL CHARGES AND ANNUAL PAY-
19 MENTS.—(1) For purposes of carrying out the provisions of 20 this section, the Administrator shall establish criteria and
21 procedures for determining the eligibility of occupants and
22 rental charges, including criteria and procedures with respect
23 to periodic review of tenant incomes and periodic adjustment
24 of rental charges. The Administrator shall issue, upon the 25 request of a housing owner, certificates as to the following

1 facts concerning the individuals and families applying for
2 admission to, or residing in, dwellings of such owner:

3 (A) the income of the individual or family; and

4 (B) whether the individual or family was displaced
5 by governmental action, is elderly, is physically handi-
6 capped, or is occupying substandard housing.

7 (2) Procedures adopted by the Administrator hereunder
8 shall provide for recertifications of the incomes of occupants,
9 except the elderly, at intervals of two years (or at shorter
10 intervals in cases where the Administrator may deem it
11 desirable) for the purpose of adjusting rental charges and 12 annual payments on the basis of occupants' incomes, but in 13 no event shall rental charges adjusted under this section for 14 any dwelling exceed the fair market rental of the dwelling.

15 (3) The Administrator may enter into agreements, or 16 authorize housing owners to enter into agreements, with
17 public or private agencies for services required in the selec-
18 tion of qualified tenants, including those who may be ap-
19 proved, on the basis of the probability of future increases
20 in their incomes, as lessees under an option to purchase
21 dwellings or cooperative ownership interests therein, and
22 in the establishment of rentals. The Administrator is 23 hereby authorized (without limiting his authority under 24 any other provision of law) to delegate to any such public

1 or private agency his authority to issue certificates pursuant
2 to this subsection.

3 (f) WAIVER OF WORKABLE PROGRAM.—Section
4 101 (c) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by inserting
5 “(i)” after the phrase “a mortgage under” in the first
6 proviso thereof and by inserting immediately prior to the
7 colon at the end of the first proviso: “, or (ii) section
8 221 (d) (3) of the National Housing Act if payments with 9 respect to the mortgaged property are paid or to be paid
10 under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development
11 Act of 1965, except that no such mortgage shall be in-
12 sured, and no commitment to insure such a mortgage shall 13 be issued, with respect to property in any community for 14 which a workable program for community improvement
15 was required and in effect at the time a contract for a loan
16 or capital grant was entered into under this title, or a con-
17 tract for annual contributions or capital grants was entered
18 into pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937,
19 unless there is a workable program for community improve-
20 ment which meets the requirements of this subsection in 21 effect in such community at the time of such insurance or 22 commitment”.

23 (g) REGULATIONS.—The Administrator is authorized
24 to make such rules and regulations, to enter into such agree-
25 ments, and to adopt such procedures as he may deem neces-

1 sary or desirable to carry out the provisions of this section.
2 Nothing contained in this section shall affect the authority
3 of the Federal Housing Commissioner with respect to any 4 housing assisted under this section and under section 221 (d)
5 (3) of the National Housing Act, including his authority to 6 prescribe occupancy requirements under other provisions of 7 law or to determine the portion of any such housing which 8 may be occupied by qualified tenants.

9 (h) APPROPRIATIONS.—There are hereby authorized to 10 be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out
11 the provisions of this section, including, but not limited to,
12 such sums as may be necessary to make annual payments,
13 pay for services provided under (or pursuant to agreements 14 entered into under) subsection (e), and provide administra-
15 tive expenses.

16 (i) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 114 (c) (2)
17 of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by inserting before
18 the colon at the end of the first proviso the following:
19 “, or a dwelling unit assisted under section 101 of the Hous-
20 ing and Urban Development Act of 1965”.

21 EXTENSION OF FHA SECTION 221 PROGRAMS

22 SEC. 102. The fifth sentence of section 221 (f) of the 23 National Housing Act is amended by striking out “subsec-
24 tion (d) (2) or (d) (4) after September 30, 1965, or under

1 subsection (d) (3) after September 30, 1965,” and inserting
2 in lieu thereof “this section after October 1, 1969,”.

3 REHABILITATION GRANTS TO HOMEOWNERS IN URBAN
4 RENEWAL AREAS

5 SEC. 103. (a) Title I of the Housing Act of 1949 is
6 amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
7 section:

8 “REHABILITATION GRANTS

9 “SEC. 115. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision
10 of this title, the Administrator may authorize a local public
11 agency to make grants (and the urban renewal project may 12 include the making of such grants) as prescribed in this sec-
13 tion. Any such grant may be made only to an individual or 14 family, as described in subsection (b), who owns and oc-
15 cupies a structure in the urban renewal area and for the pur-
16 pose of covering the cost of repairs and improvements
17 necessary to make such structure conform to public standards
18 for decent, safe, and sanitary housing as required by applica-
19 ble codes or other requirements of the urban renewal plan
20 for the area. Any contract for financial assistance under this 21 title shall provide that the capital grant otherwise payable 22 for the project shall be increased by an amount equal to the 23 total amount of such grants and that no part of the total
24 amount of such grants shall be required to be contributed as
25 part of the local grant-in-aid.

1 “(b) A grant authorized by this section may be made
 2 to an individual or family whose income does not exceed
 3 $2,000 a year, and such grant may be in an amount which
 4 does not exceed the lesser of (1) the actual (and approved)
 5 cost of the repairs and improvements, or (2) $1,000. In
 6 case the income of the individual or family exceeds $2,000 a
 7 year, a grant may be made under this section, subject to the
 8 limitations specified in clauses (1) and (2) of the preceding
 9 sentence, in an amount not to exceed that portion of the cost
 10 of such repairs and improvements as cannot be paid for with 11 any available loan which can be amortized as part of such 12 individual's or family's monthly housing expense without
 13 requiring such monthly housing expense to exceed 25 per 14 centum of such individual's or family's monthly income.”.

15 (b) Any contract with a local public agency which was
 16 executed under title I of the Housing of 1949 before the date
 17 of enactment of this Act may be amended to provide for 18 grants authorized by section 115 of the Housing Act of 19 1949.

20 PARITY OF TREATMENT FOR THE HANDICAPPED AND
 21 ELDERLY IN PUBLIC HOUSING

22 SEC. 104. Section 2 (2) of the United States Housing
 23 Act of 1937 is amended to read as follows:

24 “(2) The term ‘families of low income’ means families

1 (including elderly and displaced families) who are in the
 2 lowest income group and who cannot afford to pay enough
 3 to cause private enterprise in their locality or metropolitan
 4 area to build an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary
 5 dwellings for their use. The term 'families' includes families
 6 consisting of a single person in the case of elderly families
 7 and displaced families, and includes the remaining member
 8 of a tenant family. The term 'elderly families' means families
 9 whose heads (or their spouses) , or whose sole members, have
 10 attained the age at which an individual may elect to receive
 11 an old-age benefit under title II of the Social Security Act,
 12 or who are under a disability as defined in section 223 of that
 13 Act, or who are handicapped within the meaning of section
 14 202 of the Housing Act of 1959. The term 'displaced fami-
 15 lies' means families displaced by urban renewal or other
 16 governmental action."

17 RELOCATION PAYMENTS UNDER URBAN MASS

18 TRANSPORTATION ACT

19 SEC. 105. Section 7 (b) of the Urban Mass Transporta-
 20 tion Act of 1964 is amended by striking out all that follows
 21 the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the follow-
 22 ing: "The term 'relocation payments' means payments by the
 23 applicant which are (1) made to an individual, family, busi-
 24 ness concern, or nonprofit organization displaced by a project
 25 on or after March 4, 1965, (2) not otherwise authorized

1 under any Federal law, and (3) made only on such terms
 2 and conditions and subject to such limitations (as applicable,
 3 but not including the date of displacement) as are provided
 4 for relocation payments, at the time such payment is ap-
 5 proved, by sections 114 (b) and (c) of the Housing Act of
 6 1949. Relocation payments authorized by this subsection
 7 shall be made subject to such rules and regulations as may
 8 be prescribed by the Administrator.”

9 TITLE II—FHA INSURANCE OPERATIONS

10 LAND DEVELOPMENT

11 SEC. 201. (a) The National Housing Act is amended
 12 by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

13 “TITLE X—MORTGAGE INSURANCE FOR LAND 14 DEVELOPMENT

15 “PURPOSE

16 “SEC. 1001. The purpose of this title is to provide appro-
 17 priate credit assistance in order that private enterprise may
 18 better serve the needs of a rapidly expanding urban popula-
 19 tion by means of additional well-planned and adequately
 20 improved sites for the development of desirable residential
 21 neighborhoods, subdivisions, and sound communities.

22 “DEFINITIONS

23 “SEC. 1002. As used in this title—

24 “(a) the term ‘mortgage’ means a lien or liens on 25 real estate in fee simple, or on a leasehold (1) under a

1 lease for not less than ninety-nine years which is renew-
2 able or (2) under a lease having a period of not less
3 than fifty years to run from the date the mortgage was 4 executed;

5 “(b) the term ‘first mortgage’ includes such classes
6 of first liens as are commonly given to secure advances
7 (including but not limited to advances during con-
8 struction) on, or the unpaid purchase price of, real
9 estate under the laws of the State in which the real
10 estate is located, together with the credit instrument
11 or instruments, if any, secured hereby, and may be in the 12 form of trust mortgages or mortgage indentures or 13 deeds of trusts securing notes, bonds, or other credit
14 instruments;

15 “(c) the terms ‘mortgagee’, ‘mortgagor’, and ‘State’
16 shall have the same meaning as in section 207 of this 17 Act;

18 “(d) the term ‘improvements’ means water lines
19 and water supply installations, sewer lines and sewage
20 disposal installations, roads, streets, curbs, gutters, side-
21 walks, storm drainage facilities, and other installations
22 or work, whether on or off the site, which the Commis-
23 sioner deems necessary or desirable to prepare land
24 primarily for residential and related uses or to provide
25 facilities for public or common use. These facilities shall

1 include only such buildings as are needed in connection
2 with water supply or sewage disposal installations and
3 such buildings, other than schools, as the Commissioner
4 considers appropriate, which are to be owned and main-
5 tained jointly by the property owners; and

6 “(e) the term ‘land development’ means the process
7 of making, installing, or constructing improvements.

8 “BASIC CONDITIONS FOR INSURANCE

9 “SEC. 1003. The Commissioner is authorized (1) to 10 insure, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe,
11 any first mortgage (including advances on such mortgage) in 12 accordance with the provisions of this title and (2) to make 13 a commitment for the insurance of such mortgage prior to 14 the date of execution of such mortgage or prior to the date
15 of disbursement of the mortgage proceeds. No mortgage
16 shall be insured under this title after October 1, 1969, except
17 pursuant to a commitment to insure issued before such date.

18 “SEC. 1004. The mortgage shall—

19 “(a) be executed by a mortgagor, other than a
20 public body, approved by the Commissioner;

21 “(b) be made to and held by a mortgagee approved
22 by the Commissioner;

23 “(c) cover the land to be developed and the im-
24 provements made with the assistance of the mortgage

1 insurance, except facilities intended for public use and in
2 public ownership.

3 “SEC. 1005. The principal obligation of the mortgage
4 shall (1) not exceed 75 per centum of the Commissioner’s
5 estimate of the value of the property upon completion of
6 the land development, and (2) not exceed the sum of 50
7 per centum of the Commissioner’s estimate of the value of 8 the land before development and 90 per centum of his
9 estimate of the cost of such development. The outstanding
10 principal obligations of mortgages involving a single land
11 development undertaking, as defined by the Commissioner,
12 shall at no time exceed $25,000,000.

13 “SEC. 1006. The mortgage shall—

14 “(a) have a maturity and contain repayment pro-
15 visions satisfactory to the Commissioner;

16 “(b) bear interest at a rate satisfactory to the Com-
17 missioner, and such interest shall be exclusive of pre-
18 mium charges for mortgage insurance and such service
19 charges and fees as may be approved by the Commis-
20 sioner; and

21 “(c) contain such terms and provisions with re-
22 spect to protection of the security, payment of taxes,
23 delinquency charges, prepayment, additional and second-
24 ary liens, and other matters as the Commissioner may
25 in his discretion prescribe.

1 “SEC. 1007. A property or project to be financed by a
2 mortgage insured under this title shall—

3 “(a) represent an acceptable mortgage insurance
4 risk, giving consideration to the expected contributions
5 of the land development to sound economic community
6 growth; and

7 “(b) involve improvements that comply with all
8 applicable State and local governmental requirements
9 and with minimum standards approved by the Com-

19 “(b) The land development shall be undertaken in ac-

3 will have a sound economic base and a long economic
4 life, (ii) will be characterized by sound land-use pat-

14 “(c) The Administrator may establish a category of ex-

20 “DEVELOPMENT PRIORITIES

21 “SEC. 1009. The Commissioner shall adopt such re-

6 "SEC. 1010. After development of the land it shall be
7 served by public systems for water and sewerage which are
8 consistent with other existing or prospective systems within

5 been filed under any other title of this Act.

6 "PREMIUMS AND FEES

7 "SEC. 1012. The Commissioner shall collect reasonable
8 premiums for the insurance of any mortgage under this title
9 and make such charges as he determines are reasonable for 10 the analysis of the land development plan and the appraisal
11 and inspection of the property and improvements. On or
12 before January 1, 1969, the Commissioner shall make a
13 report to the Congress concerning the premium rates and

19 (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), and (n) of section 207 of this

6 incontestable in the hands of an approved mortgagee from 7 the date of the execution of such contract, except for fraud
8 or misrepresentation on the part of such approved
9 mortgagee.

10 "RULES AND REGULATIONS

13 as he may deem necessary or desirable to carry out the 14 provisions of this title.

15 "TAXATION PROVISIONS

16 "SEC. 1016. Nothing in this title shall be construed to
17 exempt any real property acquired and held by the Com-
18 missioner under this title from taxation by any State or 19 political subdivision thereof to the same extent, according to 20 its value, as other real property is taxed.

21 "COST CERTIFICATION

22 "SEC. 1017. (a) The Commissioner shall adopt such
23 requirements as he determines necessary to assure, at reason-
24 able intervals of time during land development and upon
25 completion of such development, that the amount of the

1 mortgage loan outstanding at each such interval does not
2 exceed with respect to that portion of the land remaining
3 under the lien of the mortgage: (1) 50 per centum of the 4 Commissioner's estimate of the value of such remaining land

15 “(d) A mortgagor's certification approved by the Com-
16 missioner shall be final and incontestable except for fraud
17 or material misrepresentation on the part of the mortgagor.

18 “(e) As used in this section, the term ‘actual costs’
19 means the costs (exclusive of kickbacks, rebates, or trade
20 discounts) to the mortgagor of the improvements. These
21 costs may include amounts paid for labor, materials, con-
22 struction contracts, land planning, engineers' and architects'
23 fees, surveys, taxes, and interest during development, organi-
24 zational and legal expenses, such allocation of general over-
25 head expenses as are acceptable to the Commissioner, and

 2 may be approved by the Commissioner. If the Commis-

 6 reasonable by the Commissioner."

TITLE I—SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR DIS-
ADVANTAGED PERSONS

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO ENABLE CERTAIN PRIVATE
HOUSING TO BE AVAILABLE FOR LOWER INCOME FAM-ILIES WHO ARE ELDERLY, HANDICAPPED, DISPLACED,
OR OCCUPANTS OF SUBSTANDARD HOUSING

SEC. 101. (a) AUTHORITY TO MAKE PAYMENTS.—

8 The Housing and Home Finance Administrator (herein-
9 after referred to as the "Administrator") is hereby author-
10 ized to make, and contract to make, annual payments to a
11 "housing owner" on behalf of "qualified tenants", as those 12 terms are defined herein, in such maximum amounts and
13 under such circumstances as are prescribed in, or pursuant 14 to, this section. In no case shall a contract provide for 15 such payments with respect to any housing for a period
16 exceeding forty years. The aggregate amount of the con-
17 tracts to make such payments shall not exceed amounts ap-
18 proved in appropriation Acts and shall not exceed $50,000,-
19 000 per annum prior to July 1, 1966, which maximum
20 dollar amount shall be increased by $50,000,000 on July 1
21 in each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968.

(b) HOUSING OWNER.—As used herein, a “housing owner” shall mean a private nonprofit corporation or other entity, a limited dividend corporation or other entity, or a cooperative mortgagor under section 221(d)(3) of the

1 National Housing Act which, since the enactment of this
2 Act, has been approved for mortgage insurance thereunder
3 and has been approved for receiving the benefits of this
4 section: Provided, That no housing owner receiving pay-
5 ments under this section may receive the benefits of the inter-
6 est rate provided for in the proviso in clause (5) of section
7 221 (d) of that Act.

8 (c) QUALIFIED TENANT.—As used in this section, a
9 “qualified tenant” means any individual or family who has,
10 pursuant to criteria and procedures established by the Ad-
11 ministrator, been determined—

12 (1) to have an income below the amount required
13 to obtain standard privately owned housing in the area
14 that is conventionally financed or that is financed with
15 a market interest rate mortgage insured under said
16 section 221 (d) (3), but above the amount which would
17 be necessary for low-income families generally to obtain
18 admission to public housing dwellings, in the same or a
19 similar area, of a size comparable to the dwelling of the 20 housing owner which is occupied, or to be occupied,
21 by the qualified tenant; and

22 (2) to be one of the following—

23 (A) displaced by governmental action;

24 (B) sixty-two years of age or older in the case
25 of an individual or, in the case of a family, to have a

1 head who is, or whose spouse is, sixty-two years of
2 age or over;

3 (C) physically handicapped; or

4 (D) occupying substandard housing.

5 (d) AMOUNT OF PAYMENT.—The amount of the annual
6 payment with respect to any dwelling unit shall not exceed
7 (1) the amount by which the fair market rental for such
8 unit exceeds one-fifth (or one-fourth in the case of a unit to 9 be rented under a lease with an option to purchase the unit
10 or a cooperative ownership interest therein) of the tenant's
11 income as determined by the Administrator pursuant to pro-
12 cedures and regulations established by him, nor (2) the 13 estimated amount of subsidy contracted for under the United
14 States Housing Act of 1937 with respect to a dwelling unit
15 of comparable size and type in the same or a comparable
16 locality.

17 (e) CRITERIA AND PROCEDURES RELATING TO TENANT
18 ELIGIBILITY, RENTAL CHARGES AND ANNUAL PAY-
19 MENTS.—(1) For purposes of carrying out the provisions of 20 this section, the Administrator shall establish criteria and
21 procedures for determining the eligibility of occupants and
22 rental charges, including criteria and procedures with respect
23 to periodic review of tenant incomes and periodic adjustment
24 of rental charges. The Administrator shall issue, upon the
25 request of a housing owner, certificates as to the following

1 facts concerning the individuals and families applying for
2 admission to, or residing in, dwellings of such owner:

3 (A) the income of the individual or family; and

4 (B) whether the individual or family was displaced
5 by governmental action, is elderly, is physically handi-
6 capped, or is occupying substandard housing.

7 (2) Procedures adopted by the Administrator hereunder
8 shall provide for recertifications of the incomes of occupants,
9 except the elderly, at intervals of two years (or at shorter
10 intervals in cases where the Administrator may deem it
11 desirable) for the purpose of adjusting rental charges and
12 annual payments on the basis of occupants' incomes, but in 13 no event shall rental charges adjusted under this section for 14 any dwelling exceed the fair market rental of the dwelling.

15 (3) The Administrator may enter into agreements, or 16 authorize housing owners to enter into agreements, with
17 public or private agencies for services required in the selec-
18 tion of qualified tenants, including those who may be ap-
19 proved, on the basis of the probability of future increases
20 in their incomes, as lessees under an option to purchase
21 dwellings or cooperative ownership interests therein, and
22 in the establishment of rentals. The Administrator is
23 hereby authorized (without limiting his authority under 24 any other provision of law) to delegate to any such public

1 or private agency his authority to issue certificates pursuant
2 to this subsection.

3 (f) WAIVER OF WORKABLE PROGRAM.—Section
4 101 (c) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by inserting
5 “(i)” after the phrase “a mortgage under” in the first
6 proviso thereof and by inserting immediately prior to the
7 colon at the end of the first proviso: “, or (ii) section
8 221 (d) (3) of the National Housing Act if payments with
9 respect to the mortgaged property are paid or to be paid
10 under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development
11 Act of 1965, except that no such mortgage shall be in-
12 sured, and no commitment to insure such a mortgage shall 13 be issued, with respect to property in any community for
14 which a workable program for community improvement
15 was required and in effect at the time a contract for a loan
16 or capital grant was entered into under this title, or a con-
17 tract for annual contributions or capital grants was entered
18 into pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937,
19 unless there is a workable program for community improve-
20 ment which meets the requirements of this subsection in 21 effect in such community at the time of such insurance or 22 commitment”.

23 (g) REGULATIONS.—The Administrator is authorized
24 to make such rules and regulations, to enter into such agree-
25 ments, and to adopt such procedures as he may deem necessary or desirable to carry out the provisions of this section. Nothing contained in this section shall affect the authority of the Federal Housing Commissioner with respect to any housing assisted under this section and under section 221 (d) (3) of the National Housing Act, including his authority to prescribe occupancy requirements under other provisions of law or to determine the portion of any such housing which may be occupied by qualified tenants.

(h) APPROPRIATIONS.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, including, but not limited to, such sums as may be necessary to make annual payments, pay for services provided under (or pursuant to agreements entered into under) subsection (e), and provide administrative expenses.

(i) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 114 (c) (2) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by inserting before the colon at the end of the first proviso the following: “, or a dwelling unit assisted under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965”.

1 subsection (d) (3) after September 30, 1965," and inserting
2 in lieu thereof "this section after October 1, 1969,".

3 REHABILITATION GRANTS TO HOMEOWNERS IN URBAN
4 RENEWAL AREAS

5 SEC. 103. (a) Title I of the Housing Act of 1949 is
6 amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
7 section:

8 "REHABILITATION GRANTS

9 "SEC. 115. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision
10 of this title, the Administrator may authorize a local public
11 agency to make grants (and the urban renewal project may 12 include the making of such grants) as prescribed in this sec-
13 tion. Any such grant may be made only to an individual or
14 family, as described in subsection (b), who owns and oc-
15 cupies a structure in the urban renewal area and for the pur-
16 pose of covering the cost of repairs and improvements
17 necessary to make such structure conform to public standards
18 for decent, safe, and sanitary housing as required by applica-
19 ble codes or other requirements of the urban renewal plan
20 for the area. Any contract for financial assistance under this 21 title shall provide that the capital grant otherwise payable 22 for the project shall be increased by an amount equal to the
23 total amount of such grants and that no part of the total
24 amount of such grants shall be required to be contributed as
25 part of the local grant-in-aid.

1 “(b) A grant authorized by this section may be made
 2 to an individual or family whose income does not exceed
 3 $2,000 a year, and such grant may be in an amount which
 4 does not exceed the lesser of (1) the actual (and approved)
 5 cost of the repairs and improvements, or (2) $1,000. In
 6 case the income of the individual or family exceeds $2,000 a
 7 year, a grant may be made under this section, subject to the
 8 limitations specified in clauses (1) and (2) of the preceding
 9 sentence, in an amount not to exceed that portion of the cost
 10 of such repairs and improvements as cannot be paid for with 11 any available loan which can be amortized as part of such 12 individual's or family's monthly housing expense without
 13 requiring such monthly housing expense to exceed 25 per 14 centum of such individual's or family's monthly income.”.

15 (b) Any contract with a local public agency which was
 16 executed under title I of the Housing of 1949 before the date
 17 of enactment of this Act may be amended to provide for 18 grants authorized by section 115 of the Housing Act of 19 1949.

20 PARITY OF TREATMENT FOR THE HANDICAPPED AND
 21 ELDERLY IN PUBLIC HOUSING

 23 Act of 1937 is amended to read as follows:

24 “(2) The term ‘families of low income’ means families

1 (including elderly and displaced families) who are in the
 2 lowest income group and who cannot afford to pay enough
 3 to cause private enterprise in their locality or metropolitan
 4 area to build an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary
 5 dwellings for their use. The term 'families' includes families
 6 consisting of a single person in the case of elderly families
 7 and displaced families, and includes the remaining member
 8 of a tenant family. The term 'elderly families' means families
 9 whose heads (or their spouses), or whose sole members, have
 10 attained the age at which an individual may elect to receive
 11 an old-age benefit under title II of the Social Security Act,
 12 or who are under a disability as defined in section 223 of that
 13 Act, or who are handicapped within the meaning of section
 14 202 of the Housing Act of 1959. The term 'displaced fami-

 21 the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the follow-
 22 ing: "The term 'relocation payments' means payments by the
 23 applicant which are (1) made to an individual, family, busi-
 24 ness concern, or nonprofit organization displaced by a project
 25 on or after March 4, 1965, (2) not otherwise authorized

1 under any Federal law, and (3) made only on such terms
 2 and conditions and subject to such limitations (as applicable,
 3 but not including the date of displacement) as are provided
 4 for relocation payments, at the time such payment is ap-
 5 proved, by sections 114 (b) and (c) of the Housing Act of
 6 1949. Relocation payments authorized by this subsection
 7 shall be made subject to such rules and regulations as may
 8 be prescribed by the Administrator.”

16 “SEC. 1001. The purpose of this title is to provide appro-
 17 priate credit assistance in order that private enterprise may
 18 better serve the needs of a rapidly expanding urban popula-
 19 tion by means of additional well-planned and adequately
 20 improved sites for the development of desirable residential
 21 neighborhoods, subdivisions, and sound communities.

22 “DEFINITIONS

23 “SEC. 1002. As used in this title—

24 primarily for residential and related uses or to provide
25 facilities for public or common use. These facilities shall

1 include only such buildings as are needed in connection
2 with water supply or sewage disposal installations and
3 such buildings, other than schools, as the Commissioner
4 considers appropriate, which are to be owned and main-
5 tained jointly by the property owners; and

6 “(e) the term ‘land development’ means the process
7 of making, installing, or constructing improvements.

8 “BASIC CONDITIONS FOR INSURANCE

9 “SEC. 1003. The Commissioner is authorized (1) to 10 insure, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe,
11 any first mortgage (including advances on such mortgage) in 12 accordance with the provisions of this title and (2) to make 13 a commitment for the insurance of such mortgage prior to 14 the date of execution of such mortgage or prior to the date
15 of disbursement of the mortgage proceeds. No mortgage
16 shall be insured under this title after October 1, 1969, except
17 pursuant to a commitment to insure issued before such date.

18 “SEC. 1004. The mortgage shall—

19 “(a) be executed by a mortgagor, other than a
20 public body, approved by the Commissioner;

21 “(b) be made to and held by a mortgagee approved
22 by the Commissioner;

23 “(c) cover the land to be developed and the im-
24 provements made with the assistance of the mortgage

1 insurance, except facilities intended for public use and in
2 public ownership.

3 "SEC. 1005. The principal obligation of the mortgage
4 shall (1) not exceed 75 per centum of the Commissioner's
5 estimate of the value of the property upon completion of
6 the land development, and (2) not exceed the sum of 50
7 per centum of the Commissioner's estimate of the value of
8 the land before development and 90 per centum of his
9 estimate of the cost of such development. The outstanding
10 principal obligations of mortgages involving a single land
11 development undertaking, as defined by the Commissioner,
12 shall at no time exceed $25,000,000.

13 "SEC. 1006. The mortgage shall—

14 " (a) have a maturity and contain repayment pro-
15 visions satisfactory to the Commissioner;

16 " (b) bear interest at a rate satisfactory to the Com-
17 missioner, and such interest shall be exclusive of pre-
18 mium charges for mortgage insurance and such service
19 charges and fees as may be approved by the Commis-
20 sioner; and

21 " (c) contain such terms and provisions with re-
22 spect to protection of the security, payment of taxes,
23 delinquency charges, prepayment, additional and second-
24 ary liens, and other matters as the Commissioner may
25 in his discretion prescribe.

1 “SEC. 1007. A property or project to be financed by a
2 mortgage insured under this title shall—

3 “(a) represent an acceptable mortgage insurance
4 risk, giving consideration to the expected contributions
5 of the land development to sound economic community
6 growth; and

7 “(b) involve improvements that comply with all
8 applicable State and local governmental requirements
9 and with minimum standards approved by the Com-
10 missioner.

11 “LAND PLANNING

12 “SEC. 1008. (a) The land development shall be under-13 taken pursuant to a schedule, conforming to such require-
14 ments and procedures as the Commissioner may prescribe,
15 that will assure the use of the land for the purposes for which 16 it is to be developed within the shortest reasonable period
17 consistent with the objectives of sound and economic com-
18 munity growth or urban development.

19 “(b) The land development shall be undertaken in ac-
20 cordance with an overall development plan, appropriate to 21 the scope and character of the undertaking, which—

22 “(1) has received all governmental approvals re-
23 quired by State or local law or by the Commissioner;

24 “(2) is acceptable to the Commissioner as providing 25 reasonable assurance that the land development will con-

1 tribute to the establishment or growth of a well-planned
2 neighborhood, subdivision, or community which (i)
3 will have a sound economic base and a long economic
4 life, (ii) will be characterized by sound land-use pat-
5 terns, and (iii) will include or be served by such shop-
6 ping, school, recreational, transportation, and other facili-
7 ties as the Commissioner deems adequate or necessary;
8 and

9 “(3) is consistent with a comprehensive plan which 10 covers, or with comprehensive planning being carried 11 on for, the area in which the land is situated and which 12 meets criteria established by the Housing and Home
13 Finance Administrator for such plans or planning.

14 “(c) The Administrator may establish a category of ex-
15 tensive new developments for which overall development
16 plans, including the adequacy of housing to be provided for 17 those who would be employed within the planned develop-18 ment, shall be reviewed by him for consistency with such 19 comprehensive plans or planning.

20 “DEVELOPMENT PRIORITIES

21 “SEC. 1009. The Commissioner shall adopt such re-
22 quirements as he deems necessary to encourage the mainte-
23 nance of a diversified local homebuilding industry and the 24 inclusion of a proper balance of housing for families of 25 moderate or low income. He may give such priority as he

1 deems reasonable to land development undertakings that
2 will, through open marketing of the developed land or other
3 means, encourage broad participation by builders and that 4 will serve families having a broad range of incomes.

5 “WATER AND SEWERAGE FACILITIES

6 “SEC. 1010. After development of the land it shall be
7 served by public systems for water and sewerage which are
8 consistent with other existing or prospective systems within
9 the area. If the Commissioner determines that public owner-
10 ship of such a system is not feasible, he may approve an 11 adequate privately or cooperatively owned system which 12 will be regulated, during the period of such ownership, in a 13 manner acceptable to him with respect to user rates and 14 charges, capital structure, methods of operation, and rate
15 of return. Approval of such system shall be given only 16 where the Commissioner receives assurances, satisfactory to 17 him, with respect to eventual public ownership and operation
18 of the system and with respect to the conditions and terms
19 for any sale or transfer.

20 “RELEASES—SUBORDINATION OF MORTGAGE LIEN

21 “SEC. 1011. The Commissioner may, on such terms and 22 conditions as he may prescribe, (1) consent to the release
23 of a part or parts of the mortgaged property from the lien
24 of the mortgage, and (2) consent to the subordination of

1 the lien of an insured mortgage upon a part or parts of the 2 mortgaged property where the subordination is necessary
3 to obtain construction financing for a dwelling on which an 4 application for the insurance of permanent financing has
5 been filed under any other title of this Act.

6 "PREMIUMS AND FEES

7 "SEC. 1012. The Commissioner shall collect reasonable
8 premiums for the insurance of any mortgage under this title
9 and make such charges as he determines are reasonable for
10 the analysis of the land development plan and the appraisal
11 and inspection of the property and improvements. On or
12 before January 1, 1969, the Commissioner shall make a
13 report to the Congress concerning the premium rates and 14 other charges under this title that he estimates will be ade-
15 quate to provide income sufficient for a self-supporting 16 program.

17 "INSURANCE BENEFITS

18 "SEC. 1013. The provisions of subsections (e), (g),
19 (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), and (n) of section 207 of this
20 Act shall be applicable to mortgages insured under this title,
21 except that as applied to such mortgages (1) any reference
22 therein to section 207 shall be deemed to refer to this title,
23 and (2) any reference to an annual premium shall be deemed 24 to refer to such premiums as the Commissioner may desig-
25 nate under this title.

1 "INCONTESTABILITY PROVISIONS

2 "SEC. 1014. Any contract of insurance executed by the
3 Commissioner under this title shall be conclusive evidence
4 of the eligibility of the mortgage for insurance, and the 5 validity of any contract of insurance so executed shall be
6 incontestable in the hands of an approved mortgagee from 7 the date of the execution of such contract, except for fraud
8 or misrepresentation on the part of such approved
9 mortgagee.

10 "RULES AND REGULATIONS

11 "SEC. 1015. The Commissioner is authorized to make
12 such rules and regulations and to require such agreements
13 as he may deem necessary or desirable to carry out the 14 provisions of this title.

15 "TAXATION PROVISIONS

16 "SEC. 1016. Nothing in this title shall be construed to
17 exempt any real property acquired and held by the Com-
18 missioner under this title from taxation by any State or 19 political subdivision thereof to the same extent, according to 20 its value, as other real property is taxed.

21 "COST CERTIFICATION

22 "SEC. 1017. (a) The Commissioner shall adopt such
23 requirements as he determines necessary to assure, at reason-
24 able intervals of time during land development and upon
25 completion of such development, that the amount of the

1 mortgage loan outstanding at each such interval does not
2 exceed with respect to that portion of the land remaining
3 under the lien of the mortgage: (1) 50 per centum of the
4 Commissioner's estimate of the value of such remaining land
5 before development; plus (2) 90 per centum of the actual 6 cost of the development allocated by the Commissioner to 7 such remaining land.

8 “(b) From time to time during and upon completion
9 of the development, the Commissioner shall require the 10 mortgagor to certify as to the actual costs of development
11 of the land.

12 “(c) Certifications required pursuant to this section
13 shall be accompanied by such data and records as the Com-
14 missioner shall prescribe.

15 “(d) A mortgagor's certification approved by the Com-
16 missioner shall be final and incontestable except for fraud
17 or material misrepresentation on the part of the mortgagor.

18 “(e) As used in this section, the term ‘actual costs’
19 means the costs (exclusive of kickbacks, rebates, or trade
20 discounts) to the mortgagor of the improvements. These
21 costs may include amounts paid for labor, materials, con-
22 struction contracts, land planning, engineers' and architects'
23 fees, surveys, taxes, and interest during development, organi-
24 zational and legal expenses, such allocation of general over-
25 head expenses as are acceptable to the Commissioner, and

1 other items of expense incidental to development which
 2 may be approved by the Commissioner. If the Commis-
 3 sioner determines there is an identity of interest between 4 the mortgagor and the contractor, there may be included
 5 an allowance for contractor's profit in an amount deemed
 6 reasonable by the Commissioner."

7 CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

8 (b) (1) Section 212 (a) of the National Housing Act
 9 is amended by inserting the following new sentence at the 10 end thereof: "The provisions of this section shall also apply
 11 to insurance under title X with respect to laborers or me-

17 health, recreational, social, or similar community services in 18 the area and consistent with comprehensive planning for the 19 development of the community in which the facility is lo-

A BILL

To assist in the provision of housing for low- and moderate-income families, to promote orderly urban development, to improve living environment in urban areas, and to extend and amend laws relating to housing, urban renewal, urban mass transportation, and community facilities.

By Mr. SPARKMAN

MARCH 4, 1965

Read twice and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

feed the patients, give them care and medicine. The savings to the VA, even on a long-term basis, would be negligible. One needs only to look at the millions poured down the various 'ratholes' in foreign aid to find this is a mere pittance."

A member of the committee added, "Let's not create Appalachias where there were none."

PATIENTS WON'T EAT BECAUSE OF WORD

Physically, Sunmount is a gleaming-white, sprawling, gracious lady of 40. It is immaculate, the staff is excellent, the patients love it and some of them have been so affected by the news that the hospital is to be shut down that they refuse to eat.

Frank Lutz, 69, a World War I veteran who served in the Navy, said, "They criticize this place because we have more employees than patients. They don't stop to consider that there are men here who have recovered from severe disabilities because of the wonderful care they get here."

"I was paralyzed so badly I couldn't talk when I came here a year ago. But at this moment I'm talking to you—and I say I wouldn't be doing it if I didn't have these people taking such good care of me. I don't give a damn if I never eat again. I don't care if I die. It's a damned shame."

Many of the patients who once were considered almost hopeless cases when they entered Sunmount have now recovered and are either employees at the hospital or have opened up shops in town, or work in the vicinity.

Mellon F. Kittell, 70, was a pilot in World War I, mostly on the Western Front. "I was dying of tuberculosis," he said, "and after they had sent me to a series of hospitals I landed here in 1938—it was New Year's Day."

TOOK HIM 10 YEARS, BUT HE RECOVERED

"Mind you, they had just about given up hope on me. I was sent here to die, I guess. I spent the next 10 years at Sunmount and I recovered."

Several years ago, Kittell opened a little leather hobby shop at 9 Mill Street, just off Tupper Lake's main street, Park Street.

He met his wife, Doris Miller, a registered nurse, at Sunmount in 1945 but it wasn't until 5 years ago that they were married. He paints, he carves, he does leatherwork and he is happy in Tupper Lake.

"The air here is part of the cure," he said, "but I do have other ailments and I have to go to the hospital every 6 weeks or so for treatment and medicine. Now, if this hospital wasn't here, where would I go? To Albany? That's 160 miles away. To Syracuse? That's even farther."

"Let's say I had to spend time in one of those far-off places. How would my wife get there to see me? Besides which, they know me here and they know my case. I get personal treatment. These are really dedicated people here in Sunmount. I think the VA isn't paying attention to the most important thing in this entire mess—the human factors," he said.

Dr. Morris W. Lambie, chief of physical medicine and rehabilitation at Sunmount, said of the VA contention that the veterans' hospitals of the future should be near medical schools. "The philosophy at Sunmount is that you do not have to be in Mecca to do good research and perform good service."

"When I came to Sunmount in 1953, there was one general medical ward and all other wards were for tuberculosis. Today the reverse is true; there is only one ward for tuberculosis."

He added, "The conversion has been such that, while our treatment of tuberculosis continues to rank second to none, the hospital's other facilities are such that only infrequently does a general medical or surgical patient have a problem that can be better resolved elsewhere."

FINDS TREATMENT SAME AS IN CITY HOSPITALS

"Sunmount meets the major needs of the northern New York veteran population with the same quality of treatment given by the metropolitan hospitals. I speak from experience, having served in larger installations," he said.

"Add to this the advantages—therapeutic, economic, and personal—of being nearer their families and homes, plus the more individualized attentions not usually available in larger hospitals."

Frank Morrison, 42, a strapping 6-footer, came to Sunmount January 26, 1942. "It was 40 below and there had been a 5-foot snowfall," he said. "I had been with the 69th Regiment of the 27th Division and I had contracted TB. Within 2 years I was cured and discharged."

"That same year I met Sis and we were married. Four years later I came to work here to help others."

Frank is a recreation therapist at Sunmount. It is common during the summer to see him lift amputees into a boat for some fishing on the big lake, and to take them for rides into the tall pines.

He has a $5,900 mortgage on his home, a son in college, a daughter who is ready to study teaching and another boy about to go to college.

"It sounds great," he said, "to tell a guy he can have a job elsewhere, but who wants to leave this country? My salary would be the same, but chances are I couldn't live as well somewhere else."

"My family was born here. They love the area. Now, we are waiting for our little dream world to collapse."

FOR OLD VETS, TIME TO MOVE, TIME TO LAMENT

(By Phil Santora)

(Second of three articles)

The veterans home and hospital at Bath, N.Y., one of those marked for oblivion by the Veterans' Administration, serves a 10-State area with a total population of 9 million veterans—and both the staff and the townspeople are shocked that the 68-year-old institution may go out of business.

As in Tupper Lake, N.Y., the payroll from the VA center is a significant factor in the local economy. In Tupper Lake, credit business has fallen off 40 percent in some instances because residents are afraid they may not be able to pay for new autos, wall-to-wall carpeting, and other items when the economy falters and then stops still.

The same is true in Bath, though to a lesser extent because about one-third of the total wage income—instead of 45 percent as in Tupper Lake—comes from the VA center.

It is true that three of the buildings at Bath have been condemned. However, it is also true that a recreation hall—one of the finest to be found anywhere—was built there in 1959 at a cost of $1,200,000.

PLACE OF TRADITION, OLD BUT EFFICIENT

This is an old institution, but efficiently operated. It was originally built by New York State in 1877 as the State soldiers and sailors home. It passed to the Federal Government in 1930.

The graveyard, on a sunny knoll overlooking the countryside, is the last resting place of almost 7,000 men who served their country—from the Civil War to the Korean police action.

The first to be buried there was Michael Ahern, on June 25, 1879. The last was only a few days ago. One of the ancients at the home is Pat McGuinnis, a brisk, young 96 with a grip of iron, who has two uncles, Frank and Pat McGuinnis, buried there.

So, this is a place rich in tradition—a beautiful spot in the Finger Lakes country where old warriors have gone to recuperate, to rest, to spend the remainder of their days in peace and ultimately make their way up the knoll in a hearse.

U.S. WILL BE FORCED TO PAY MORE ELSEWHERE

Ed Humphrey, a local real estate broker who lost a leg in the landings in Normandy, is heading up the fight to save the center. He pointed out that the plant has a value of about $20 million, that the venerable domiciliary—as the home is called officially—is the only one in that part of the country, that the hospital would also be forced to close if the home is abolished.

Said Humphrey: "I think one fact has been overlooked; someone somewhere in this country is going to have to take care of these men. Some of them have threatened to go on relief rather than move out of the area."

"Their pensions are so small they couldn't even buy the medicines they need, let alone live a normal life. The taxpayer is going to have to take care of the men who fought for their country, whether it is in Bath or somewhere else."

"That leads to another fact—that our cost per patient here is much lower than it would be in private or in other VA hospitals elsewhere. So, how does the Government save money by throwing away an installation of this size?"

The home houses more than 800 veterans and is filled to near capacity. The men who have spent years there are willing and able to perform chores are paid small sums—up to 65 cents an hour—and the various buildings are mostly in charge of these members-workers.

Some of them are too shocked, too inarticulate to speak their minds. Not Charles Gernler, however. Charlie, 74, is a World War I veteran, as are most of the men in "the dom."

He is an instructor in crafts—starting the program in 1950 with a tiny shop in the basement and expanding it to the point where dozens of the men take advantage of his teaching.

"A lot of the men," said Charlie, "are so depressed over the news that they don't care whether they live or die. This is their home—the only real one many of them ever had."

HE DARES TO CALL IT TREASON IN REVERSE

"I feel like many of them—I won't leave New York State. I'll move into Bath and try to get along. But many of these men won't be able even to make a living and they certainly can't make ends meet on their little pensions."

"The Government is doing one thing in closing this place—they're making bums out of men who fought for this country. My country is going to disgrace me and others who don't deserve it. This is treason in reverse."

"The United States gives millions to foreigners who spit in Uncle Sam's face by way of thanks. We can toss money away all over the world but our country can't even take care of these men, who ask only that they be allowed to die with some dignity among people they know."

"I want to tell you something, mister. I closed up my machine shop—gave up my business—to fight in World War I. I lost my wife because she didn't think I should go. But my country came first and I would do it all over again. But I don't like playing second fiddle to foreigners."

Charles Naffky, 75, was gassed in the Argonne, fought at St. Mihiel, and came to Bath 15 years ago to become a member-employee.

He has a heart condition, is arthritic, but does chores for the blind.

"I couldn't do a thing if I left here," said Naffky, "but here I feel like someone. I write letters for the blind, run errands for them, take care of them—I'd die if I couldn't do something for someone, because I've always been active.

PULLED UP BY ROOTS LIKE UNWANTED WEEDS

"Take away this little job of mine and I'd be nothing—I'd lose what little dignity I have left. I fought in the trenches for 18 months. I was willing to die for this country—but I don't want to die this way, off among people I don't know."

Another patient said, "I couldn't make the trip to a new place—and I understand the nearest one is down in Virginia where my relatives, who are older than I, would never get to see me again."

"It is a cruel, inhuman thing to ask us to pull up roots."

The dom has an average daily member load that ranges from 733 to 844. The average patient roster at the hospital is about 229. There are 619 employees, including the part-time home workers. The budget is $4,605,644.

There are the emotional viewpoints, of course, and there are the more dispassionate ones. One elderly man said, "I have no friends or relatives around here and it makes no difference to me whether I stay here or go down South someplace. Maybe the weather down there would be nice and warm and I could get out of this blizzard belt."

Among some of the employees there is a certain fatalism about the closing. They have resigned themselves to it and many of them are already trying to obtain employment in the area. They don't want the jobs in VA centers elsewhere.

One or two admitted that maintenance of the Bath VA center "is an expensive proposition" but added quickly that the cost would not diminish appreciably if the patients were taken elsewhere. As in Tupper Lake, they pointed out the cost of moving employees and patients would be high and said they could not see why a $20 million installation should be closed when it was still serviceable.

TOWN CANNOT ABSORB UNCLE SAM'S ORPHANS

Dr. Frank Nicklaus, mayor of Bath, is understandably shaken by the prospect of seeing his community lose a good share of its income.

"We're in better shape than Tupper Lake," he said, "but there is not enough industry in this area to absorb those employees who might want to remain here. Then, too, there is little doubt that many of the men in the dom will become public charges if they choose to stay here in town instead of going to another dom."

The average age of the men in the dom at Bath is 67—an old 67. These are men who have lost their skills through illness or who never acquired any. Some of them are drifters. Some are alcoholics.

MOST NEVER GET BACK IN THE SWIM

Their average life expectancy is 4 years from date of admission at age 67. Most of them are never really rehabilitated, few of them ever go back into the community to work again and become normal citizens.

Ed Humphrey pointed out that maintaining a man in the dom costs only about $5 a day, as compared to $26 a day in a hospital bed.

There are malingerers there, as there are in every VA installation. There are bums and there are men who crumpled from their efforts to fight life.

But as veterans of several wars, they paid quite a price of admission to the grounds.

PROPOSED HOUSING LEGISLATION

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the President has sent to the Congress his housing message. As I understand, the message proposes the introduction of at least two bills in order to implement the proposals contained in the housing message.

One of these bills which may be referred to as an omnibus housing bill and which ordinarily is referred to the Banking and Currency Committee has been presented to us for introduction. Another bill, which I understand will be forthcoming in the near future will, if we follow past precedent, be referred to the Committee on Government Operations. I propose to introduce the omnibus housing bill presently. I will not, however, introduce the second bill. I shall defer to a member of the Government Operations Committee to introduce that measure.

Mr. President, I, of course, have not had sufficient opportunity to study in detail the President's housing message, or the bill to implement the proposals contained in that message. I can say, however, that from my very hurried review of these documents, the President's housing program is a very large and ambitious one. It includes many good provisions. It includes provisions to continue, either by date extension or through the authorization of additional funds, many existing housing programs that have served our people well. I refer, of course, in particular to the mortgage insurance programs of the Federal Housing Administration, the college loan program of the Community Facilities Administration, the rural housing program of the Farmers Home Administration, the urban renewal program of the Urban Renewal Administration, and so on.

In addition, it contains proposals for new programs. In general, I believe some of the new proposals may be helpful in meeting the housing needs of our people. On the other hand, it contains proposals which must be very carefully studied and some which I do not approve.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, by request, I now introduce for proper referral the administration's omnibus housing bill, entitled the "Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a section-by-section summary of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1965

Section 1. Short title: The bill would be cited as the "Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965."

TITLE I—SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR DISADVANTAGED PERSONS

Section 101. Financial assistance to enable certain private housing to be available for lower income families who are elderly, handicapped, displaced, or occupants of substandard housing.

This section would authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to undertake a program of rent supplements to serve people who are in need of standard housing and are in the lower income range above the level prevailing for admission to low-rent public housing and below that necessary to obtain standard private housing, including moderate-income housing financed with FHA-aided market-interest rate mortgages insured under section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act.

Under the proposed program, rent supplements would be available with respect to housing to be built with the assistance of

FHA-insured section 221(d)(3) market-interest rate mortgages and owned by private nonprofit corporations, limited dividend corporations, or cooperatives. Lower housing costs would be achieved for eligible occupants by rent supplement payments owner made directly to the project owner. Such payments for an occupant would be in an amount sufficient to reduce the rent to the level that the occupant could afford. If the income of the occupant (other than the elderly) later increased, the amount of the rent supplement payments would be reduced until the occupant could afford to pay the full rent, at which time the payments for that occupant would cease.

In addition to the income range requirement, eligibility for the rent supplementation aid would be restricted (1) to the elderly and the physically handicapped, (2) to those displaced by urban renewal and other public improvement programs, including code enforcement and (3) to those living in substandard housing. In serving these persons the program will also increase the supply of moderate-income private housing.

The rent supplement payments that could be contracted for with respect to any project assisted under this section would be limited to a term of 40 years. The aggregate amount of such payments contracted for could not exceed amounts approved in appropriation acts nor $50 million per annum, but this limitation would be increased by $50 million on July 1 of each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968.

The amount of rent to be paid by an occupant would be 20 percent of income, except where the occupant obtains a lease with option to purchase either sales-type housing or a unit in a cooperative, in which case the rent or charges to be paid would be 25 percent of income. Sales-type housing could be provided in a rental project where units, such as row or detached houses, are rented initially but are designed so that they could later be transferred to individual ownership. Tenants selected for participation in lease-purchase arrangements would be only those with a potential for increased incomes for homeownership. When the income of an occupant has increased to the point that 25 percent of income would enable the occupant to assume ownership, this would be done generally with the aid of an FHA-insured section 221 home mortgage or, in the case of a cooperative dwelling, by changing his status from tenant of the cooperative to cooperating member.

Income ceilings and floors would be established for each area. In each area, the rent supplement payments could not exceed the public housing contractual subsidy amount for a comparable unit in the same or a comparable area. The income floor in any area would be the maximum income limit for admission of low-income families generally to public housing in that area.

The organizations owning the private projects assisted under the program would select the occupants, subject only to certain facts relating to eligibility as determined by the Housing Administrator or his delegatee. Prospective occupants would be referred by the housing owner to appropriate offices or agencies for the purpose of obtaining the Housing Administrator's certification as to facts concerning eligibility. More specifically, the certification would relate to the tenant's age or physical handicap where this is the basis for eligibility, or displacement, or occupancy of substandard housing. Certifications would also relate to incomes at initial occupancy and every 2 years thereafter, or more frequently if the Housing Administrator deems it desirable, except that recertifications after initial occupancy would not be required in the case of the elderly.

The amount of rent supplements to be paid to the project owner with respect to any occupant would be the difference between 20 percent of income (or 25 percent in the case of leases with option to purchase) and the full rent that is required under the market interest rate FHA-insured mortgage financing. A given proportion of the units could be available for tenants or cooperative housing applicants who would not require any rent supplements, and the balance of the units would be available for tenants or cooperative housing applicants who would need rent supplements. Payment of the rent supplements would be delegated by the Administrator to the FHA.

A workable program will be required with respect to housing assisted under this section in any community where Federal assistance is being provided for code enforcement, urban renewal, or public housing, and with respect to such housing in any community for which a workable program was required and in effect at the time Federal assistance was provided for code enforcement, urban renewal, or public housing.

Administrative limitations on the per-unit mortgage amount would be applied in all areas. The per-unit mortgage limit for an area would be the same as is now used in the FHA-insured below-market interest rate program under section 221(d)(3). Under the latter program, the per-unit mortgage limit is that mortgage amount for a unit which would require a rent equal to 20 percent of the maximum income limit established for that area.

The rent supplement payments to be made under this program would help provide housing for people who are in need of standard housing and are in the income gap referred to above. In this income range are many of the 60,000 to 70,000 families displaced each year by public improvement actions and the approximately 10,000 a year whose incomes become too high for continued occupancy in public housing. Increasing code enforcement will increase public action displacements. Altogether, there are about 1.6 million elderly households (families or individuals) in this income gap, as well as about 1.8 million nonelderly nonfarm families living in substandard units.

The flexibility provided in rent supplement payments would enable people of various incomes to become occupants of the units to be provided without requiring an excessively high proportion of their income to be paid for rent. Moreover, after initial occupancy, the rent supplement payments would be adjusted at least every 2 years (except as to elderly) and paid only as needed and in the amounts needed.

The rent supplementation program would to a very great extent utilize private participation. The projects would be owned by private nonprofit, limited dividend, or cooperative groups; constructed by private builders; and financed by private lenders with FHA-insured market interest rate mortgages.

Section 102. Extension of FHA section 221 programs: This section would continue for 4 years (from September 30, 1965 to October 1, 1969) the authority of FHA to insure mortgages under its section 221 programs of housing for lower income families. This includes extension of the "(d)(3) below market" rental housing and the "(d)(2)" low downpayment sales housing programs.

Section 103. Rehabilitation grants to homeowners in urban renewal areas: This section would authorize the limited use of urban renewal capital grant funds for rehabilitation grants to certain homeowners in urban renewal areas. These grants would be used only in hardship cases where no other means of financing is available to avoid displacement of the homeowners. These would be the few but important cases involving elderly and others where low interest rate loans (under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964) are not feasible for the purpose of financing rehabilitation necessary to make the home conform to public standards for decent, safe, and sanitary hous-

In the case of an individual or family whose annual income is not more than $2,000, the amount of a grant could not exceed the lesser of (1) the actual and approved cost of the repairs and improvements, or (2) $1,000. In the case of an individual or family whose annual income is more than $2,000, the amount of a grant could not exceed the lesser of (1) the actual and approved cost of the repairs and improvements, or (2) $1,000, or (3) that portion of the cost of such repairs and improvements that could not be paid for with any available loan which could be amortized, along with such individual's or family's other monthly housing expense, without requiring their monthly housing expense to exceed 25 percent of monthly income.

In other words, in the case of an individual or family whose income exceeds $2,000 a year, no grant could be made for that portion of the actual and approved cost of required repairs and improvements which could be paid for with a loan which could be amortized, along with that individual's or family's other monthly housing expense, with 25 percent of its monthly income. This limitation would require most individuals and families with incomes over $2,000 to finance the cost of such repairs and improvements with loans. In some cases, these loans can be obtained through private financing. For those unable to obtain private financing on reasonable terms, direct 3 percent interest-rate loans will be made available under the provisions of section 312 referred to above.

Repairs and improvements for which grants authorized by this section could be made available include the repair or replacement of plumbing facilities, such as piped hot and cold running water, hot water heaters, flush toilets, or bathtubs, and such basic rehabilitation work as is necessary to bring the dwelling unit up to the standards for decent, safe, and sanitary housing established by the local housing code or the urban renewal plan.

Successful execution of an urban renewal rehabilitation project requires, in addition to upgrading property in the project area, that displacement be minimized. Even with a 3 percent rehabilitation loan, many homeowners in urban renewal areas, especially elderly homeowners, cannot afford to make the necessary repairs and improvements to their properties.

At present, if such homeowners cannot bring their property up to the required standards, the property must be acquired and either be rehabilitated or torn down by the local public agency. It is clear that the grants authorized by this section would make it possible to carry out urban renewal projects with the acquisition of fewer properties (and consequently less displacement of families) than otherwise would be possible.

The grants authorized by this section for low-income individuals and families in urban renewal areas will assist in upgrading properties, as well as help to minimize displacement and its consequent problems. Aside from the social costs involved in displacing homeowners who cannot afford to repair and improve their property to required standards, there is the dollar cost involved in providing to these displaced homeowners the relocation payments authorized by the urban renewal law.

The cost of providing the rehabilitation grants authorized by this section would not exceed $2 to $3 million annually.

Section 104. Parity of treatment for the handicapped and elderly in public housing:

This section would establish parity of treatment between the handicapped and elderly and thereby facilitate the provision of housing for handicapped families by making applicable to the handicapped certain existing provisions that are now available for housing for the elderly. It would increase by $1,000 ($500 in the case of Alaska) the maximum room cost limits applicable to public housing designed specifically for the handicapped; would authorize a special contribution of up to $120 per unit per year to dwelling units occupied by the handicapped; and would exempt the handicapped from the requirement that there be a 20-percent gap between the upper rental limits for admission to a proposed low-rent housing project and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing a substantial supply of standard housing.

The Housing Act of 1964 contained a number of provisions designed to facilitate the provision of housing for the handicapped, including a provision which made handicapped individuals eligible for admission to low-rent housing. However, while that act in general established parity of treatment between the handicapped and the elderly under relevant Federal housing programs, it did not fully extend this principle to the low-rent public housing program. Most significantly, the increased room cost limits applicable to housing designed specifically for the elderly and the special $120 contribution for the elderly were not extended to the handicapped. The handicapped family's need for specially designed housing, and the very low incomes of many of these families, clearly justifies the extension of these benefits.

Estimates based on a national survey conducted by the Public Health Service from mid-1957 to mid-1961, showed that 5,306,000 persons age 15 to 62 were reported to have chronic conditions which limited them in the amount and kind of major activity, such as employment or housework, which they could undertake. An additional 1,204,000 persons in this age category were further restricted since they were unable to carry on a major activity.

The Public Health Service data also showed the family incomes applicable to the persons reported on. Relating this family income data to the $3,100 median income limit for admission to PHA-assisted low-rent housing in 1960 for an average size family of 3 or 4 persons, it is estimated that 40 percent of the 5,306,000 families containing a person with chronic conditions limiting the amount and kind of major activity would be eligible for admission to low-rent housing. Twenty-six percent of these 5,306,000 families had incomes of less than $2,000. For the 1,204,000 families in which there was a person who was not just limited in capacity but who was unable to carry on a major activity, about 55 percent would be eligible for low-rent housing and 40 percent had incomes of less than $2,000.

It will be noted, however, that many of these persons who are less than age 62 would qualify as "elderly" under the present provisions of the United States Housing Act of 1937, if their condition were such as to constitute a disability as defined in section 223 of the Social Security Act. This section of the bill would extend the same status and benefits to the others whose condition would render them "handicapped" within the meaning of section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, even though their condition does not constitute a disability as defined in section 223 of the Social Security Act.

Section 105. Relocation payments under Mass Transportation Act: This section would amend the relocation payment provisions of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 to make the payments to individuals, families, business concerns and nonprofit organizations displaced by federally aided urban mass transportation projects after the date the bill is introduced the same as those provided under the urban renewal and low-rent public housing programs.

Under these provisions, payments to families and individuals could not exceed $200 for moving costs and property loss. In addition, families and elderly individuals displaced on and after the date of introduction of the bill could receive a relocation adjustment payment of up to $500 to assist them in relocating in standard accommodations.

For businesses, the payment could not exceed $3,000 for moving expenses and loss of property, except that where actual moving expenses are greater than $3,000 the maximum relocation payment to a business concern could not exceed the total of the actual moving expenses. By regulation this would be limited to $25,000 or actual expenses, whichever is less. Independent businesses displaced after the date of introduction of the bill which have average annual net earnings of less than $10,000 could receive additional readjustment payments of $1,500.

Under the present provisions of the mass transportation law the relocation payments may not exceed $200 in the case of an individual or family, or $3,000 (or, if greater, the total certified actual moving expenses) in the case of a business concern or nonprofit organization. By regulation, payments are limited to $25,000 or actual moving expenses, whichever is less.

TITLE II—FHA INSURANCE OPERATIONS

Section 201. Land development: This section would authorize Federal assistance to land development.

FHA mortgage insurance for land development: Subsection (a) would add a new title X to the National Housing Act which would authorize FHA mortgage insurance to assist in financing the cost of land development for residential and related uses. The activities financed under the title would include the acquisition of land and its improvement with water and sewer facilities, roads, streets, sidewalks, storm drainage facilities, other site improvement work, including certain community buildings approved by the Federal Housing Commissioner. These activities involve substantial capital requirements which the mortgage insurance would assist in meeting. The land made available for further development could vary in size and type from land suitable for a small, but well-planned neighborhood or to a suburban subdivision or an even more extensive new development, such as a new town.

During the next 10 years, new homes will be required for 15 to 20 million families. The new title X would help assure that sites are available for these homes at more economical prices and in communities which avoid the wasteful sprawl and disorganization of much recent urban development. Through adequate planning, home buyers can receive the benefit of good design and the conveniences and economies of adequate facilities for the community. This is true for well-planned small tracts and for more extensive developments.

In addition, in the case of extensive new development, there could be additional savings resulting from the ability to select land in areas now largely undeveloped and yet provide all needed facilities. The extensive new development can also more easily provide nearby industrial, commercial, civic and recreational facilities, thereby minimizing transportation costs and efforts and may also provide a fuller range of housing both as to incomes served and as to design.

The homebuilding and mortgage-lending industries have shown sharply increasing interest in such extensive developments, and quite a few have been started throughout the Nation. The availability of FHA mortgage insurance would permit smaller land developers, and smaller local homebuilders and mortgage lenders to participate in this desirable trend on a cooperative basis, since at the present time the large capital requirements involved tend to limit the possibilities of participation to very large participants. The extension of the long testive device of FHA mortgage insurance for housing and related purposes to the land development stage would in effect bring FHA's services to private enterprise up to date in the light of contemporary trends in the homebuilding and mortgage-lending industries.

There follows a section-by-section summary of the proposed new title X of the National Housing Act:

Section 1001. Purpose: The purpose of the title is: "to provide appropriate credit assistance in order that private enterprise may better serve the needs of a rapidly expanding urban population by means of additional well-planned and adequately improved sites for the development of desirable residential neighborhoods, subdivisions, and sound communities."

Section 1002. Definitions: This section contains definitions of terms used in the title, including a definition that indicates the nature of eligible site improvements. The only buildings that would be eligible as site improvements are those needed for water supply or sewage disposal installations or such other buildings (except schools) to be jointly owned and maintained by the property owners as the Commissioner considers appropriate.

Sections 1002-1008. Basic conditions for insurance and land planning: (a) Authority to issue mortgage insurance commitments under the title would expire on October 1, 1969; (b) The insured mortgage loan could not exceed the lesser of (1) 75 percent of the Federal Housing Commissioner's estimate of the value of the property as of the completion of land development or (2) the sum of 50 percent of his estimate of the value of the land before development and 90 percent of his estimate of the cost of the site improvements. The insured mortgage amount outstanding could not exceed $25 million; (c) The improvements and the development plan would be required to comply with all applicable State and local governmental requirements and with FHA's standards. The land development schedule would in all cases contemplate development within the shortest reasonable period consistent with sound development, and the development plan for the site would be required to be consistent with a comprehensive plan which covers, or with comprehensive planning being carried on for, the area in which the land is situated.

The comprehensive plans or planning would in all cases meet criteria established by the Housing and Home Finance Administrator, and would encompass activities such as those referred to in section 701(d) of the Housing Act of 1954. The applicable criteria would differ for different types of planned developments; for example—a suburban subdivision immediately adjacent to the developed outskirts of a city or an extensive new development with large residential, commercial, and industrial areas to be situated in the countryside between two large cities. In the first case, the plan would need to demonstrate the adequacy of the community environment to provide an appropriate setting for the new subdivision, and that land uses and public facilities would be consistent with comprehensive planning for the entire urban area. In the second case, the criteria would contemplate a comprehensive plan for a larger urban area to demonstrate the interacting relationship between the new development and other communities in the urban area (including the two large cities), major employment centers, major open spaces, and intercity transportation facilities.

In all cases the criteria to be established by the Administrator will have as their purpose reasonable assurance that the process of comprehensive planning for the area where the land is situated includes, as an integral part of that process, provisions for making the planning effective so that the proposed development assisted by the mortgage insurance will in actual fact be compatible with the present and projected development of the wider area where the land is situated.

In the case of a site proposed to be prepared for an extensive new development, the Administrator would review the site development plan (including the adequacy of housing to be provided for those employed within the planned development) for consistency with the overall comprehensive plan or planning for the area. However, in all ordinary cases this review would be the responsibility of the Federal Housing Commissioner.

All land development plans would be required to be acceptable to the Commissioner as providing reasonable assurance that the land development will contribute to the establishment of growth of a well-planned neighborhood, subdivision, or community which (i) will have a sound economic base and a long economic life, (ii) will be characterized by sound land use patterns, and (iii) will include or be served by such shopping, school, recreational, transportation, and other facilities as the Commissioner deems adequate or necessary.

Section 1009. Priorities: The Commissioner would, in administering the program, encourage the maintenance of a diversified local homebuilding industry and the inclusion in land development plans of a proper balance of housing for families of moderate or low income and he may give a priority among land development undertakings assisted under the title to those undertakings that will, through open marketing of the developed land or other means, encourage broad participation by builders and that will serve families having a broad range of incomes.

Section 1010. Water and sewerage facilities: The land after development would normally be expected to be served by public systems of water supply and sewerage. These would be consistent with other existing or prospective systems within the area. If the Commissioner finds that a public system is not feasible he may, under such assurances as he may require with respect to eventual public ownership and operation, approve an adequate privately or cooperatively owned system. Such a system would be required to be regulated in a manner acceptable to the Commissioner to protect the interest of consumers as to user rates and charges and methods of operation and also as to terms of any sale or transfer of the systems.

Sections 1011-1015. Miscellaneous: These sections relate to the subordination of mortgage liens, the assessment of reasonable premiums and fees, the payment of mortgage insurance benefits, insurance contract incontestability, and the issuance of FHA rules and regulations.

Section 1016. Taxation: This section provides that real property acquired and held by the Commissioner under this title shall not be exempt from State or local real estate taxation.

Section 1017. Cost certification: This section contains a requirement for certification by the mortgagor of actual development costs to be made from time to time to assure that the outstanding balances of loans insured under the title during the course of land development will be appropriately limited to reflect both the actual costs of development and the release of improved parcels from the lien of the mortgage.

Amendments to other provisions of law appropriate for conformity with the proposed new title X are made by subsection (b) of this section.

Paragraph (1) of subsection (b) would amend the labor standards provisions of the National Housing Act to make them applicable to work performed by laborers and mechanics employed in land development receiving financial assistance under the proposed new title X program.

Paragraph (2) (A) would amend the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act "Special Assistance" provisions to make inapplicable, in the case of title X mortgages on extensive new developments, the present statutory dollar ceilings that are based on mortgage amounts per family residence or per dwelling unit.

Paragraph (2) (B) would amend the definition of "mortgages" in the FNMA Charter Act to make it clear that the "home mortgages" referred to in the statement of purposes and elsewhere in that act include the proposed new land development mortgages as well as all other mortgages insured under the National Housing Act.

Paragraph (3) would amend the Federal Reserve Act to permit national banking associations to make loans secured by title X mortgages.

Paragraph (4) would amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 to permit Federal savings and loan associations to invest in title X insured mortgage loans to the extent permitted under Federal Home Loan Bank Board regulations.

Paragraph (5) would include among the eligible categories of planning grants under section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954, grants for planning for areas in which there is to be established an extensive new development on land improved or to be improved with assistance under the proposed new title X or on land acquired or to be acquired with assistance under section 202(b) (1) of the housing amendments of 1955.

Paragraph (6) would make the existing population limits in the public facility loans program authorized by section 202 of the housing amendments of 1955 inapplicable to financial assistance extended to municipalities or other political subdivisions in connection with an extensive new development on land improved or to be improved with assistance under the proposed new title X, or on land acquired or to be acquired by State land development agencies with assistance under section 202(b) (1) of the housing amendments of 1955.

State land development agencies

Subsection (c) of this section would authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to make loans to land development agencies (created or designated by or pursuant to State legislation) to finance the acquisition of land to be utilized in connection with development of well-planned residential neighborhoods, subdivisions, and communities. The land so acquired would be sold to private builders, and possibly after installation of basic public facilities, for the construction of well-planned developments. These may be residential neighborhoods, housing subdivisions or more extensive new developments.

The loans would be limited to an amount not exceeding the total cost as approved by the Administrator, of the acquisition of a fee simple or other interest in the land, including capitalization of interest for the term of the loan, and related expenses. The loans would be required to be reasonably secured and would be repayable within a period not exceeding 15 years at an interest rate of not more than the average annual interest rate on all interest-bearing obligations of the United States forming a part of the public debt, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 percent, plus one-half of 1 percent. For the current fiscal year this formula produces an interest rate of 4 percent.

Loans for land acquisition could not be made unless the Administrator determines that (1) private financing is not otherwise available on reasonable terms; (2) the development of a well-planned residential neighborhood, housing subdivision, or community on the land would be consistent with a comprehensive plan or with comprehensive planning, meeting criteria established by the Administrator, for the area in which the land is located; and (3) a preliminary development plan for the use of the land meets criteria which he has established.

The subsection further provides that the land acquired with Federal financial assistance under this subsection must be developed in accordance with a development plan approved by the Administrator. Sales of the land to private persons may not be for less than its fair value for uses in accord with the approved development plan. A development plan, wherever feasible in the light of current conditions, would be required to encourage the provision of sites providing a proper balance of types of housing to serve families having a broad range of incomes.

This program is designed to assist the State governments that wish to establish land development agencies in order to take advantage of the State government's unique powers to promote the planned development of future urban growth. As a governmental body with an area of jurisdiction beyond the confines of the geographical boundaries of a city, county, or special district, these State land development agencies could become focal points in the process of planning for attractive and efficient urban development. Through these public land development agencies State governments, which are responsible for the well-being of all of its citizens, would become instrumental in fostering comprehensive planning of new areas expected to be populated within the foreseeable future.

State governments are already concerned with economic planning with respect to promoting industrial development and seeking to induce business concerns to locate (or relocate) their industrial plants within their States. Many State governments are also engaged in some form of systems planning in connection with determining the location of, and standards for, water and sewer facilities, location of State highways, and the planning of other public works.

Once the public land development agencies are established, and after some experience with Federal loans indicates that this type of State activity is both practical and successful, private investor interest in the obligations issued by the State land development agencies can be expected. Such private funds are expected to be obtainable at interest rates below 4 percent.

Loans authorized by this subsection would be made from the revolving fund established by title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955 to finance the public facility loan program. No additional authorization is necessary. It is estimated that during the first full year of operations the amount of Federal funds committed for loans authorized by this subsection will not exceed $25 million.

Section 202. Extension of insurance authorizations: This section would continue for 4 years (from the present termination date of October 1, 1965 to October 1, 1969) the authority of FHA to (1) insure property improvement loans under its title I program, (2) insure housing loans and mortgages under all of its programs except those with independent termination dates, and (3) insure mortgages providing housing under its sections 809 and 810 programs for the military, NASA, and AEC. The section 221 program of mortgage insurance for housing for low- and moderate-income families would be continued for 4 years by another section in title I of the bill.

Section 203: Multifamily mortgage limits for four or more bedroom units: This section would permit an increased dollar limitation on the amount of a mortgage financing multifamily housing with dwelling units consisting of four or more bedrooms (except where the mortgage is insured under the section 810 program for the military). For example, under the regular rental housing program (sec. 207), the mortgage limit would be $21,000 per dwelling unit (an increase of $2,500) in the case of a family unit with four or more bedrooms. No change would be made in the existing limits for dwelling units containing no bedrooms, or one, two, or three bedrooms.

Prior to the Housing Act of 1964, the FHA was able to recognize additional rooms almost without limit as to number in the statutory per room multifamily mortgage limits. While the former per room limits too often led to superfluous additional rooms to the detriment of design, they did permit the recognition of the cost of additional bedrooms. The FHA has found, in working with the new family unit limitations added by the 1964 Housing Act, that they do not contain adequate provisions for financing projects with large units having four or more bedrooms. For this reason, an additional dollar limitation is being proposed for four or more bedroom units. This additional dollar limitation would enable the FHA to reflect properly the added cost of large units in the maximum mortgage amount and encourage production of accommodations for larger families where needed.

Section 204. Rehabilitation in urban renewal areas:

The principal purpose of this section is to encourage more rehabilitation of housing for rent in urban renewal areas by removing an obstacle which unduly restricts the use of the FHA section 220 urban renewal housing program as it applies to nonoccupant owners of 1- to 11-family structures. Under the amendments of section 220 of the National Housing Act provided by this section a nonoccupant mortgagor who intends to hold 1- to 11-family housing for rent would be entitled to a larger loan amount which would be more in line with that now permitted where the housing consists of larger multifamily structures. The amendments would liberalize and make section 220 more workable for financing the construction, purchase, or rehabilitation of housing in urban renewal areas.

Section 220 would be amended (1) to increase the maximum amount of a mortgage which can be insured where the mortgagor is not an occupant of the property and intends to hold it for rent, and (2) where refinancing is involved, to permit existing indebtedness for improvement of the property to be included in the computation of the amount of a mortgage whether or not the indebtedness is secured by a mortgage against the property. Under existing law only indebtedness secured by the property may be included in the insured mortgage.

Under the proposed amendment, a non-occupant mortgagor could obtain an insured loan for rehabilitation, purchase or construction of a 1- to 11-family property for rent in an amount which is 93 percent (now 85 percent) of the amount that an owner-occupant of the property could receive. Under existing law, an owner-occupant may obtain a rehabilitation loan which does not exceed (1) 97 percent of $15,000 of the estimated value before rehabilitation, plus 90 percent of estimated value above $15,000 but not above $20,000, plus 75 percent of value above $20,000, or (2) the estimated cost of rehabilitation plus cost of refinancing. For new construction the loan can be up to 97 percent of $15,000 or estimated replacement cost, plus 90 percent of cost above $15,000 but not above $20,000, plus 75 percent of the cost above $20,000.

Since under this section a nonoccupant mortgagor could obtain 93 percent of the amount that could be obtained under either of these formulas, the amount he would obtain would in effect be approximately 90 percent of the value or replacement cost of the property, depending upon the formula applicable. In no case involving refinancing of housing to be rented could the mortgage amount exceed the estimated rehabilitation cost plus refinancing.

Under the present law, a nonoccupant mortgagor of rental housing may obtain a mortgage in an amount only up to 85 percent of that permitted for an owner-occupant. In a case of refinancing and rehabilitation he may have a substantial equity in the property, but the 85-percent limit requires him to increase his cash outlay and equity more than he is willing to do.

A nonoccupant mortgagor who intends to sell the housing would continue, as the law presently provides, to be eligible for a mortgage up to 85 percent of the amount available for an owner-occupant, except that the mortgage amount can be the same as that permitted for an owner-occupant if the mortgagor places 15 percent of the mortgage proceeds in escrow pending sale to an acceptable owner-occupant within 18 months.

Section 205. Nondwelling facilities for urban renewal rental housing: A multifamily rental housing project in an urban renewal area financed with a mortgage insured by FHA under the section 220 urban renewal housing program would be permitted, by amendments in this section, to include more nondwelling facilities financed by the mortgage than under the existing law. Under the new provisions, the Federal Housing Commissioner could permit such nondwelling facilities as he deems desirable and consistent with the urban renewal plan to be included in the project. However, the project would have to be predominantly residential, and the Commissioner would also have to find that any nondwelling facilities included in the project would contribute to the economic feasibility of the project. To assure that commercial construction under this provision will be kept at a minimum, the Commissioner intends to require that proposed projects, involving more commercial facilities than are presently permitted, must be sent to the Washington office for review.

Under existing law the mortgage on a section 220 rental housing project can finance only such nondwelling facilities as the Commissioner deems adequate to serve the needs of the occupants of the property and of other housing in the neighborhood. This provision is too limited for housing in urban renewal areas where the facilities are essential to renting the housing but are economically feasible only if they can serve a larger area.

Sponsors would be more willing to undertake the provision of rental housing in urban renewal areas, particularly in areas where there has been extensive clearance of slums, if this provision is enacted because they would be assured of more rapid renting of the units in the project. Quick renting of housing in an urban renewal area depends on the availability of shopping centers and other commercial services and facilities of this nature.

Section 206. Larger insured mortgages for servicemen: The limit on the amount of an FHA section 222 insured mortgage, financing the home of a serviceman in the Armed Forces or the Coast Guard, would be increased from $20,000 to $30,000. This larger maximum mortgage is requested by the Department of Defense in order to make the special program for servicemen under that section more useful in providing housing. The downpayments required would be the same as those required under FHA's regular section 203(b) home mortgage insurance program—that is, 3 percent of the value of the property up to $15,000, 10 percent of the value of the property over $15,000 but not over $20,000, plus 25 percent of the value above $20,000.

Under the section 222 program the Department of Defense pays the mortgage insurance premium where a home is purchased by a serviceman with a mortgage insured under the program and so long as he is in the service. Over 75,000 servicemen currently have homes purchased with these mortgages. Around 276,000 additional homes are needed for career military personnel.

Under the present provisions of section 222 a mortgage cannot exceed $20,000 in amount. Housing construction costs and related expenses of homeownership have increased. The effective incomes of many career military members have also been increased by changes in the military compensation system. In high-cost areas in particular, the $20,000 limit does not provide an adequate or appropriate home, especially in the cases of servicemen above the grade of major or lieutenant commander.

Section 207. Refinancing of insured mortgages: This section would correct an omission in existing law. It would give FHA the same authority to insure mortgages executed for the purpose of refinancing existing mortgages insured under any FHA insured mortgage program as is now available for mortgages insured under sections 220, 221, 903, 908 and certain section 608 mortgages.

The principal amount of any refinancing mortgage cannot exceed the original principal amount or the unexpired term of the existing mortgage, except that if the Commissioner determines that an additional term will inure to the benefit of FHA the refinancing mortgage may have a term of not more than 12 years in excess of the unexpired term of the existing mortgage.

This refinancing authority serves a useful purpose in assisting mortgagors who encounter financial difficulties, especially those owning multifamily housing projects. It also serves to protect the interests of the mortgagee and of the FHA in marginal cases where the alternative to refinancing may be default and foreclosure. There does not seem to be any sound basis for limiting the authority, as is done by present law, to certain specified programs under the act.

Section 208. Consolidation of insurance funds: As a means of streamlining accounting procedures, with substantial economies in operations both in Washington and the field offices, this section would provide that all FHA insurance funds be consolidated into two funds; namely, a mutual mortgage insurance fund, and a general insurance fund. The mutual mortgage insurance fund would be continued in its present coverage and form, and all other insurance funds and accounts would be consolidated under a single insurance fund—the general insurance fund. All title I property improvement loans would be registered for insurance, and mortgages under all of FHA's insurance programs would be endorsed for insurance under the general insurance fund, except those mortgages committed and insured under the regular section 203 home mortgage insurance program. The assets and liabilities of all of the current funds and accounts except the mutual mortgage insurance fund would be transferred to and become the responsibility of the general insurance fund.

Since its creation in 1934, the programs of the Federal Housing Administration have from time to time been expanded and broadened in order that it could be of increasing assistance in providing housing to meet the needs of all Americans. These goals have not yet been fully achieved and additional programs will undoubtedly be proposed and enacted into law in the future.

As new insurance programs have been authorized, new insurance funds or accounts have usually been created, thus requiring separate financing and accounting for the programs. These funds and accounts have grown from 2 in 1934 to 15 at the present time.

In the early 1950's it became apparent that, by reason of the small volume of insurance written under some of the special purpose

programs, revenues would be insufficient to maintain those programs on a self-supporting basis. Because of this, and in order to strengthen FHA's over-all position and avoid the necessity of calling upon the Congress for operating funds, section 219 was added to the National Housing Act. That authorized the Commissioner to transfer moneys from any one or more insurance funds or accounts to any other fund or account, except the participating reserve account and the general surplus account of the mutual mortgage insurance fund.

The effect of section 219 was to give FHA all of the advantages and flexibility of single fund accounting but it left the agency burdened with the expense and necessity under the act for full and complete accounting for each of its present 15 funds or accounts.

While the maintenance of separate insurance funds affords complete financial information with respect to each of FHA's various insurance programs, such complete accounting and fiscal data on a continuing monthly basis are unnecessary for management purposes. Moreover, the maintenance of the separate funds complicates FHA's financial structure.

Under the proposed consolidation of funds statements would be provided monthly for the general insurance fund and the mutual mortgage insurance fund with respect to the status of the funds. Data would also continue to be supplied which is needed to evaluate the effectiveness of individual programs.

The proposed consolidation would reduce from 15 to 2 the number of monthly entries to be accounted for and later consolidated into a combined balance sheet and statement of income and expense. It would substantially reduce field reporting of expenses. The consolidation would also result in significant savings in the Treasury Department since the recordkeeping, issuance, exchange, and redemption of debentures would relate to only 2 series of debentures rather than 22 series as at present.

After consolidation, FHA would still be able to compute with reasonable accuracy the financial experience of individual programs, as the need might arise. Special attention would continue to be given to income and loss experience under the section 213 cooperative housing program in compliance with the desire expressed in the conference report on the Housing Act of 1964. The semiannual and annual valuation of reserve requirements would continue to be prepared as in the past.

Section 209. Optional cash payment of insurance benefits:

This section would authorize the Federal Housing Commissioner, in his discretion at the time of payment, to offer payment of insurance benefits in cash on any insurance claim filed by a mortgagee on or after the date of its enactment. At present, the FHA does not have this general authority, but periodically calls in debentures for redemption to the extent deemed appropriate. The proposed new authority in no way changes the basic nature of the FHA debenture system, as the Commissioner would be given no new authority to agree in advance to make payments in cash instead of debentures.

A cash payment under this new authority would be in an amount equivalent to the face amount of the debentures that would have been issued, plus an amount equivalent to the interest which the debentures would have earned, computed to a date established by the Commissioner. In a case where a mortgagee, under his mortgage insurance contract, is entitled to receive debentures, the mortgagee would still be entitled to receive payment in debentures rather than in cash if the mortgagee does not want to accept a cash payment. Mortgagees filing insurance claims on mortgages insured under the section 220, 221, or 233 programs (urban renewal housing, low- or moderate-income housing, and experimental housing) after the Housing Act of 1961 now have in their insurance contracts the right to a cash insurance settlement. Also, lenders insuring home improvement loans under section 203 (k) after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964 have the right to receive cash insurance benefits.

For various reasons, occasions may arise when it would be in the national interest to pay insurance benefits in cash rather than in debentures. For example, the sale of debentures in the private capital markets may result in losses to their holders where there is a spread in interest rates. Where adverse conditions exist in the private capital market, it would be desirable for the Commissioner to have the authority to make cash payments of insurance benefits in all programs.

In order to have funds with which to make such cash payments, the Commissioner would need the authority to borrow from the U.S. Treasury such amounts as he determines from time to time. The Treasury loans would bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary, taking into consideration the average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities during the month preceding the issuance of the obligations evidencing the loans. Of course, this borrowing authority would be in place of the U.S. guarantee on the debentures which would otherwise be issued.

TITLE III—URBAN RENEWAL

Section 301. General neighborhood renewal plans:

This section would make more realistic the statutory requirements with respect to general neighborhood renewal plans.

It would permit a GNRP to be prepared for an urban renewal area or areas together with any adjoining area or areas having specially related problems and eliminate the present requirement that the whole area covered by the GNRP be an urban renewal area.

However, this section would not make eligible for urban renewal project activities any areas not presently eligible, and would not provide any increased grant assistance, through noncash credits or otherwise, to urban renewal projects carried out in those portions of the area covered by the GNRP in which urban renewal project activities can be undertaken.

To permit unified planning of total neighborhoods, this section would authorize a GNRP area to include subareas which are not in themselves so blighted or deteriorated as to require urban renewal treatment. Under present legislative language, all parts of a GNRP area must be slum or blighted, deteriorated, or deteriorating, to the same extent as is required before an urban renewal project can be undertaken in the area. The amendment would make possible, for example, study of the street capacities and requirements of an entire neighborhood rather than only those portions of that neighborhood already scheduled to receive urban renewal assistance through an urban renewal project or projects.

This section would also ease the present requirement that all urban renewal projects in the urban renewal area covered by the GNRP be completed in 10 years and would require only that all such projects be initiated in that time. The present law describing a GNRP states that, "urban renewal activities therein may have to be carried out in stages * * * over an estimated period of not more than 10 years." Experience with urban renewal activity in GNRP areas has proven this requirement to be unrealistic.

Section 302. Increase in authority for capital grants:

This section would increase the aggregate amount of obligational authority for urban renewal grants by $2.9 billion. Of the new $2.9 billion authority, $675 million would be authorized upon the enactment of the bill, with further increases of $725 million on July 1, 1966, and $750 million on July 1 in each of the years 1967 and 1968.

The existing figure designating total present urban renewal grant authorization ($4,725 million) would be reduced by $25 million to reflect the deletion of an obsolete proviso in that amount. This is the proviso which authorized the use of a portion of the urban renewal grant authorization for demonstration grants under the urban mass transportation program.

The new authority would permit, over a period of 4 years, an increasing level of urban renewal activity. It is geared to available local resources for the financing and carrying out of projects during this period, and takes into consideration other legislative provisions in the bill. The volume of need and demand for this program are well recognized, and extend to almost all cities in all areas of the United States.

Section 303. Community renewal program requirement:

This section would establish a new community renewal program requirement for communities of over 50,000 population which seek Federal assistance for urban renewal projects. The new requirement would apply to projects for which planning is commenced (and provided "Federal recognition") later than 6 months after the date of enactment of the bill. When a community later applies for approval of the urban renewal plan and for loan or grant assistance in its execution, the community would be required to demonstrate that the proposed project is in accord with an up-to-date "community renewal program" which it has prepared as the basis of a communitywide attack on urban renewal problems, making use of all available Federal and local resources. This requirement would be modified, during the first 3 years after enactment of this bill, in order to provide sufficient time for cities to prepare such programs. During that time the community could instead demonstrate that it is actively preparing such a program and that the proposed project can reasonably be expected to be in accord with it upon its completion.

There would also be a complete exemption from the requirement in the case of projects undertaken in disaster areas, in accord with the special urban renewal law provisions for such projects. To be of full assistance, such projects must go into execution as soon as possible, and they are therefore exempted from other regular statutory requirements.

An acceptable community renewal program would not be required to have been prepared with Federal assistance. However, such assistance, in the form of two-thirds grants, is already available under provisions which were added to the urban renewal law by the Housing Act of 1959. The basic purpose of such programs is to assess in broad terms the community's overall needs for urban renewal and to develop a staged program of action, commensurate with its resources, to meet these needs, determining, to the extent feasible, individual urban renewal areas and activities and appropriate schedules and priorities for undertaking such projects.

Activity in this field has been steadily increasing since about 1961. Sixty-nine localities of over 50,000 population are now preparing such programs with Federal grant assistance, and 7 others have completed initial preparation. Already, about one-third of all cities of this size which are undertaking urban renewal projects are also undertaking community renewal programs. Sufficient experience has now been gained with these programs, and their value, so that it is both feasible and desirable to require, rather than permit, larger communities to undertake such programs as a basis for individual urban renewal project planning.

Experience to date has shown that a community renewal program can be valuable to a locality in bringing to its attention problems and opportunities in scheduling and coordinating urban renewal projects. It can, for example, determine the effect on a proposed project of housing resources and relocation needs in other proposed projects and public undertakings. It can also focus on the social and economic needs of the residents of slum and deteriorated areas and the resources available to meet those needs—which are of direct importance in planning urban renewal activities in those areas. Whether and to what extent an area can be rehabilitated depends, for example, not only on the type and condition of its buildings but also on the age and family size of its residents, their incomes, and their willingness and ability to participate in the upgrading and maintaining of the area. Community renewal programs can help to make available information on such questions and help to assure that necessary social services and facilities are provided.

The community action programs authorized in the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 and the new rehabilitation and code enforcement provisions of the Housing Act of 1964 have already provided important new opportunities for increased effectiveness in urban renewal. This bill would provide additional opportunities through its new grant programs for rehabilitation, for neighborhood facilities, and for the provision and beautification of open space and other public land. One of the primary purposes of the proposed community renewal program requirement is to assure that urban renewal projects are planned and scheduled to obtain maximum benefit from the facilities and activities assisted under such programs. With their help many localities should find it possible to give increased emphasis to rehabilitation, compared to clearance activities, and to gray area and other residential renewal, compared to commercial and industrial renewal.

Section 304. Amendment of section 316 of Housing Act of 1954: This section would clarify the authority of the Redevelopment Land Agency of the District of Columbia to undertake urban renewal projects in areas which are not residential or predominantly residential at the outset by amending section 316(2) of the Housing Act of 1954 (which inserted a new section 20 in the District of Columbia Redevelopment Act of 1945) to provide unmistakable authority for the Redevelopment Land Agency to undertake non-residential projects as contemplated by title I of the Housing Act of 1949.

TITLE IV—LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING

Section 401. Acceptance of local certification of equivalent elimination:

This section would permit acceptance of certifications by local governing bodies that they have complied with the equivalent elimination requirements of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937.

This amendment is essentially technical in character. It is designed to eliminate unnecessary administrative processing and attendant expenses, and is in line with administration and congressional policy to eliminate unnecessary administrative costs and vest greater local responsibility in local governmental agencies.

Under the act, where a low-rent housing project is undertaken in a locality, the local governing body must enter into an agreement providing for the elimination, within 5 years, of a number of substandard dwelling units equivalent to the new low-rent housing units included in the project. Extensions of the 5-year period for elimination can be granted where there is an acute shortage of decent low-income housing in the community. Administration of this provision now involves direct Federal supervision over the carrying out of the equivalent elimination agreement, even though the act provides no specific penalties for noncompliance. Such supervision would be eliminated by this section.

Section 402. Greater use of existing private housing:

This section would perfect the annual contributions formula to permit local housing authorities to make greater use of the private housing supply through the purchase, purchase and rehabilitation, or lease of privately owned units, which are available on the local market and suitable for low-rent housing purposes.

The present annual contributions formula establishes a maximum contribution in terms of a specified percentage (the "going Federal rate" plus 2 percent) of the acquisition or development cost of a project. Under this formula, use can only be made of housing with an economic life extending over a sufficient period to allow the amortization of the capital cost at the statutory rate. This rate was designed to permit amortization of bonded indebtedness over a long period, and the established practice has been to contract for periods of 40 years. Such a period is too long to permit utilization of many kinds of existing housing that may be suitable for low-rent housing, or to permit the leasing of units desirable for relatively short-term use.

This section would authorize an alternative formula under which the annual contribution for an acquired or leased unit could be fixed, as a maximum, at the same dollar amount as would be established as the annual contribution under the conventional formula for a new low-rent housing project consisting of units designed for the comparable number, types, and sizes of families. Because it is not stated in terms of a specific percentage of capital cost, the formula would permit the acquisition, or acquisition and rehabilitation, of structures, over whatever period may be appropriate considering the condition and nature of the property, as well as the leasing of units for short-term use in meeting particular needs.

The new formula is intended to promote economies in the use of such housing through its requirement that the annual Federal contribution could never exceed the fixed contribution that would be established for comparable housing in a new project. Where a project or dwelling is acquired for use over a substantially shorter period than is required for units in the regular program, this would mean that the capital cost would have to be reduced according to the reduction in amortization period, since the maximum contribution available annually to amortize that cost could be no greater than in the case of a comparable conventional newly constructed project, but this annual amount would be available for substantially fewer years than in the case of the newly constructed project. The same limitation on the dollar amount of the annual contribution would apply to leased units, and would operate to preclude the excessive rentals that might otherwise result from efforts to secure housing for lease in a housing market where vacancies are low.

There has been a growing awareness in recent years that the subsidized low-rent housing program has suffered because it has not utilized the existing housing supply. Under this new authorization the PHA would be enabled to finance the leasing for any term of privately owned units in individual houses and in multifamily structures. It would be able to finance joint private-public owned or leased units. It would be able to subsidize units financed through other means such as FHA-insured conventional financing, or State or municipal financing.

An important source of existing housing is the supply of FHA and VA-acquired properties. Despite high vacancy rates, there are many low-income families in communities where vacancies exist who continue to live in slum conditions because they are unable to pay the economic rent which the vacant properties warrant.

In many cases local authorities should be able to provide units more quickly under this section, than through new construction and meet more readily the special problems presented by large numbers of low-income displacees. The new formula should also provide greater flexibility in providing housing for different kinds of families, as in obtaining units for larger families and providing conveniently located units for elderly families. A collateral advantage of broadened use of existing structures is its effect in encouraging the conservation and improvement of residential properties.

Projects involving the purchase of existing housing would, of course, be subject to the same requirements of approval and cooperation by the local governing body as in the case of new construction. As in the case of the regular program, there will be local selection of the properties and sites to be used.

Since the units which are leased will be privately owned and subject to tax, the required local contribution, normally provided through tax exemption, would have to be provided by other means. The required local contribution, when property is not tax exempt, is the amount by which the taxes paid exceed 10 percent of the shelter rents charged in the project or dwelling. Local communities can easily meet this requirement by authorizing the housing authority to retain from payments in lieu of taxes to be paid with respect to its tax exempt properties the amount required to meet this local contribution with respect to the privately owned units.

Use of existing housing will constitute a valuable supplement—but nevertheless merely a supplement—to new construction. Existing housing can be effectively used for low-income families only where a combination of certain conditions exist. There must, first, be a supply of vacant housing on the local market, and that housing must freely be made available, since eminent domain will of course not be used under the new program. Moreover, the vacant housing should be appropriately located to serve the needs of the low-income families to be housed. Its cost, design, and physical condition must be appropriate, and its use should be consistent with the community plans and urban renewal programs and in accord with the wishes of the local governing body.

Section 403. Increase in authorization for annual contributions: This section would increase the limit on the aggregate amount of annual contributions contracts for low-rent housing, so as to permit continuation of the regular program for conventional units at approximately its past average and current level, plus provision of additional units through new approaches involving purchase and leasing of existing housing, with or without rehabilitation. Contracts for approximately 240,000 units over the next 4 years would be authorized.

For conventional units, the increase contemplates a program level of 35,000 units a year. For new approaches (purchase, leasing, and rehabilitation) the increase would provide for an additional 100,000 units over the 4-year period. The law would not, however, prescribe specific levels for the different approaches.

Program levels, each of the 4 years, are estimated as follows:

	Regular program	Purchase	Leasing
1966-----	35,000	10,000	5,000
1967-----	35,000	15,000	10,000
1968-----	35,000	15,000	10,000
1969-----	35,000	20,000	15,000

To permit this level of program activity, the amendment would increase the limit on the aggregate amount of annual contributions by $47 million on the date of enactment of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, and by the same amount on July 1 in each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968, or an aggregate increase of $188 million.

Experience with the interim additional authorization which was provided in the Housing Act of 1964 has already shown that the need and the demand are great and continuing. The additional authorization in the 1964 act contemplated the provision of 37,500 units of low-rent public housing. Affecting this authorization were the applications on hand when it became available, plus subsequent applications. Applications for about 74,000 units had been received by the end of January 1965, and more than 40,000 units had been placed under program reservation. Taking into account attrition and delays, and in order to place the 37,500 units under annual contributions contracts by September 30, 1965, the PHA plans to place a total of about 50,000 units under program reservation. In view of the application for some 24,000 units above this amount, the PHA has already instituted priorities and limitations. It assumes that the 24,000 units, plus any additional units remaining from the 50,000 and included in applications received after January, will have to depend upon further congressional authorization.

The provisions of the bill which would provide more flexibility in connection with the acquisition, leasing, and rehabilitation of existing housing, and the provisions extending to the handicapped parity of treatment with the elderly, would afford new means for meeting the needs.

Without any additional authorization for annual contributions, the public housing program can also be a valuable vehicle for helping families make an easier adjustment to urban living conditions. In many cases, low-income families are not even aware of the services which are available, and such services have often been inadequate. To help develop a better range of services to meet the social needs of families in public housing, and coordinate those existing services, local housing authorities will be authorized to provide broader assistance within the framework of the public housing program. Such a program could provide special counseling in the maintenance of housing, as well as counseling to families prior to moving into or out of public housing. These are primarily the kinds of services that an enlightened manager would want to engage in for the more economical management of the housing.

At the Federal level PHA will work to the fullest extent possible with other interested agencies, such as the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Office of Economic Opportunity. At the local level local housing authorities would cooperate, as appropriate, with other local public agencies and private nonprofit community service organizations. Expenditures from project revenue would be authorized only for specific planned programs which would be periodically reviewed. In approving programs, preference will be given to those in which a substantial portion of the costs are met by funds from sources other than those supplied by the PHA-aided program or by funds derived from demonstrable economies achieved by local housing authorities in their operation.

Section 404. Sale of federally owned projects to private purchasers: This section would remove the restriction that federally owned public housing projects may be sold only to public housing agencies. It would permit disposal to a nonprofit organization, but any sale would have to be for continued use as low-rent housing. There are two remaining federally owned public housing projects, both of which are located in Oklahoma. Disposal of these projects has been blocked by the restriction permitting sale only to a public housing agency, since Oklahoma law does not authorize creation of local public housing authorities. Removal of the restriction would permit consideration to be given to disposal to a purchaser, such as a nonprofit organization. The projects would continue to be subject to the requirement that they be used only for low-income families.

TITLE V—COLLEGE HOUSING

Section 501. Increase in authorization for college housing loans:

This section would increase the college housing loan authorization by $110 million upon the enactment of the bill, with further increases of $285 million on July 1 in each of the years 1966 and 1967, and $275 million on July 1, 1968. This section would also increase on July 1 in each of the years 1965 through 1968: (1) by $30 million the ceiling on loans for other educational facilities (such as dining halls, health facilities, and student unions) and (2) by $15 million the ceiling on loans to hospitals for nurses and intern housing.

The Treasury borrowing authorization for the college housing loan program now totals $2,875 million with ceilings of $295 million for college service facilities and $220 million for hospitals. Through the end of December 1964, a total of 2,328 loans for $2,502 million have been approved under this program. As of this date, there were 172 applications for $267 million for which funds had been reserved, bringing the total funds committed to $2,769 million.

Through December 1964, funds committed under the program provide assistance for about 2,360 projects, including housing accommodations for about 593,000 students and faculty (including student nurses and interns) and also 239 projects for related facilities such as student unions, dining halls, and health centers. There have been no defaults under the program in payment of principal and interest.

The Office of Education's college and university enrollment and facilities survey indicates an increase in college enrollments from 5.2 million in 1965 to 6.7 million in 1969. Assuming that about 25 percent of this increased enrollment will require college housing accommodations costing about $5,000 per student, it is estimated that total college housing needs during the next 4 years will amount to about $2 billion, exclusive of related facilities (cafeterias, dining halls, student unions, infirmaries, and other essential service facilities), and exclusive of the current backlog of unmet housing needs.

The increased authorization in this section, with amounts from repayment of loans, would give institutions of higher learning assurance that the present program would continue during the next 4 years to supplement funds available in the private market. This would permit the institutions to plan their residential and related construction programs to meet the expected tidal wave of students. The increased authorization would permit increased program levels in fiscal 1967, 1968, and 1969.

TITLE VI—GRANTS FOR BASIC PUBLIC WORKS, NEIGHBORHOOD FACILITIES, AND THE ADVANCE ACQUISITION OF LAND

Section 601. Purpose:

The rapid rise in population that has occurred in the Nation has outpaced the ability of many localities to provide necessary basic community facilities and neighborhood health and recreation facilities. There is a tremendous need for additional basic water supply and sewerage disposal facilities to provide for future population growth. Between 1960 and 1975 the urban population alone is expected to rise from 125 to 171 million and the per capita use of municipal water systems is expected to increase from 140 to 160 gallons per day. As a result, municipal water consumption (excluding large industrial users) is expected to increase from 17.5 to 27.4 billion gallons per day, a rise of 57 percent in just 15 years.

Relatively limited local resources are available for neighborhood facilities such as community centers, health stations, or other public buildings that house health and recreational facilities. Nonetheless, such facilities are essential to our communities so that they can effectively cope with such problems as the debilitating effects of idleness upon their juvenile and elderly population. Substantial Federal financial assistance will be required to enable local governments to provide adequate neighborhood facilities geared to such needs of the young and the elderly.

Great economies and other benefits can be gained by the advance acquisition of land planned to be utilized in connection with the future construction of public works and facilities. Such advance acquisition makes possible large monetary savings; savings which have ranged from $5 to $30 for every dollar invested in the advance acquisition of future highway rights-of-way.

The purpose of this title is to assist and encourage the communities of the Nation to meet the needs of their citizens by making it possible with Federal grant assistance for their governmental bodies (1) to construct adequate basic water and sewer facilities needed to promote the efficient orderly growth and development of our communities, (2) to construct neighborhood facilities needed to enable them to carry on programs of necessary social services, and (3) to acquire, in a planned and orderly fashion, land to be utilized in connection with the future construction of public works and facilities.

Section 602. Grants for basic water and sewer facilities:

This section would authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to finance a portion of the cost of certain projects for basic water and sewer facilities.

The amount of any grant made under this section could not exceed 40 percent of the cost of that portion of the project which is necessary to enable the project to adequately serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area to be served by the project.

No grant could be made for any project unless the administrator determines that the project will serve an area which is expected to experience significant population growth in the reasonably foreseeable future and that the project is (1) designed so that adequate capacity will be available to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area, (2) consistent with the program for a unified or officially coordinated areawide water or sewer facilities system as part of the comprehensively planned development of the area, and (3) necessary to orderly community development. Prior to July 1, 1968, grants, in the discretion of the administrator, could be made if a program for an areawide water and sewer facility system is under active preparation but not yet completed, if the facility for which assistance is sought can reasonably be expected to be required as part of such program, and there is an urgent need for the facility.

The areawide system for basic water and sewer facilities would be required to be a part of the comprehensively planned development of the area. The requirement that a basic water and sewer facility assisted under this section be part of a unified or officially coordinated areawide water or sewer facility system will assure that Federal grant funds do not finance uncoordinated or fractionated water or sewer facilities. Where there are no existing areawide water or sewer systems the administrator would require as a condition to a grant for a single, independent water or sewer project, that the project be designed so that it can be linked with other independent water or sewer facilities or a proposed areawide system.

In addition, requiring that the areawide water or sewer facility be related to the comprehensively planned development of the area will assure that grant funds available under this section will be available only for facilities which help promote orderly community development and are consistent with a coordinated scheduling of other public works in the area. Such orderly development and coordination will minimize waste and unnecessary costs which are the result of the unplanned and haphazard construction of basic community facilities.

The requirement that a facility assisted with funds under this section have adequate capacity to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area will avoid the duplication of costs often occasioned by having to rebuild undersized facilities at a later date.

The Federal grants for basic water and sewer facilities authorized by this section will stimulate an acceleration in the rate of construction of water supply and sewerage disposal facilities needed for growth and will contribute to the development of areawide systems which are consistent with comprehensive local planning.

Proper regard will be given to established standards to assure that facilities constructed with assistance under this section are adequate for the maintenance of health and control of water pollution.

Section 603. Grants for neighborhood facilities: This section would authorize the Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to finance specific projects for neighborhood facilities, including neighborhood or community centers, youth centers, health stations, and other public buildings to provide health or recreational or similar social services. The grants generally would be limited to 66⅔ percent of the development cost of the project, but could be up to 75 percent of such cost in the case of a project located in an area designated as a redevelopment area under section 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act.

Before making a grant under this section, the Administrator would be required to determine that the project would provide a neighborhood facility which is necessary for carrying out a program of health, recreational, or similar social services in the community. The project must be consistent with comprehensive planning for the development of the community. These Federal grants would thus help to stimulate a concerted effort by local public bodies, possibly in cooperation with private groups, to provide systematically for the often long-neglected local health, recreational, and social service needs of the community.

Since most of these needs are largely those of low- and moderate-income families and individuals, the neighborhood facility projects would have to be so located as to be available for use by a significant portion (or number in the case of large urban places) of the area's low- or moderate-income residents. In addition, a priority would be given to applications for projects that will primarily benefit members of low-income families or otherwise further the objectives of a community action program approved under title II of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

No neighborhood facility aided by a Federal grant may be converted for a period of 20 years to other uses without the approval of the Administrator. In approving any conversion the Administrator may impose additional conditions and requirements.

It has been increasingly recognized that much of the heavy costs of ill health, dependency, juvenile delinquency, and old age could be avoided by preventive measures such as adequate local preventive health, recreational and related social services. The cost of these services are small when compared to the tremendous economic and social losses resulting from illness and deprivation and the mounting expenditures in curing sickness, making welfare payments, combating crime, and accommodating the needs of the elderly. Availability of Federal grants for neighborhood facilities (many of which can be multipurpose facilities which can serve the needs of different groups) will encourage communities to expand, and in some instances initiate, a group of community services which hitherto have been neglected.

To obtain a Federal grant a local government would have to furnish from its own resources the remaining funds needed to complete the project. In addition, it would have to allot sufficient funds to operate the facilities after they are built.

Section 604. Advance acquisition of land: This section would authorize the Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to assist in financing the acquisition of sites planned to be utilized in connection with the future construction of public works or facilities. The grant could not exceed the aggregate amount of reasonable interest charges on a loan or other financial obligation incurred to finance the acquisition of such land for a period not exceeding the lesser of 5 years from the date of issue of such loan or financial obligation or the time elapsing between the date of issue and the date on which construction of the public work or facility is begun.

Before making such grants the Administrator would be required to determine that the public work or facility for which the land is to be utilized is planned to be constructed or initiated within a reasonable period of time. He also would have to determine that construction of such public work or facility will contribute to economy, efficiency, and the comprehensively planned development of the area.

On some occasions, circumstances arising after the acquisition of land purchased with assistance under this section may make construction of the facility planned to be placed on such land no longer feasible or desirable. A community which has acquired land with assistance under this section may then wish to divert the land to other uses. In such circumstances the Administrator is authorized to require the repayment of assistance provided under this section and prescribe the terms and conditions of such repayment.

To qualify for Federal financial assistance, a community would have to be engaged in comprehensive planning appropriate to its size and location. Larger urban areas and communities experiencing rapid growth would have to be engaged in comprehensive planning for the development of the entire urban area. The public work or facility for which the advance acquisition of land is to be made would have to be consistent with a communitywide and areawide system of such facilities.

In smaller isolated communities it will not be necessary that the entire planning process be underway. For such places, it would be enough to have a clear indication that the community had examined its probable future size, public facility needs, and financial capacity and that the proposed facility would be an efficient element in its efforts to meet its future needs. In addition, to the extent that there is an overall plan for the development of the community, the public work or facility for which advance acquisition of land is to be made will have to be consistent with the existing overall plan.

The objective of this Federal assistance is to encourage communities to plan ahead, in connection with their future public works needs, with respect to land acquisition as well as preparation of construction plans. Under section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954, the Housing Administrator is authorized to make interest-free advances to finance the planning of specific works. But the advance acquisition of sites is equally important in helping to attain maximum economy and efficiency in the construction of public works. Such advance site acquisition would be assisted by the new program.

By encouraging communities to anticipate the site requirements for future public works construction and by assisting them in the timely acquisition of the land that will be used in such future construction, the new program will help produce a number of savings. Local public bodies will be assured of the availability of appropriate sites and will save by acquiring sites before the rising trend of land prices increases their cost. Advance acquisition before there is further construction on a site would avoid the costs of demolishing such construction, relocating the occupants of the buildings and disrupting businesses. Advance knowledge regarding the site location of future public works would enable private land developers and builders to make appropriate adjustments in their construction plans or schedules, which would lead to more orderly growth in the area.

Section 605. General provisions: Subsection (a) of this section would apply certain administrative provisions found in section 402 of the Housing Act of 1950 to activities carried on under the provisions of this title.

Subsection (b) authorizes the Administrator to make advance or progress payments on account of any grant made under this title and provides that no part of any such grant could be used for payment of ordinary governmental or operating expenses.

Section 606. Definitions: This section would, for the purposes of this title, define: (a) "State" to include the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the territories and possessions of the United States; (b) "local public bodies and agencies" to include public corporate bodies or political subdivisions; public agencies or instrumentalities of one or more States, municipalities or political subdivisions of one or more States (including public agencies and instrumentalities of one or more municipalities, or other political subdivisions of one or more States); Indian tribes; and boards or commissions established under the laws of any State to finance specific capital improvement projects; and (c) "development cost" to mean costs of the construction of the facility and the land on which it is located, including necessary site improvements to permit its use as a site for the facility.

Section 607. Labor standards: This section provides that prevailing wages determined in accordance with the provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act are to be applicable to construction work financed with assistance under sections 602 and 603 of this title, and specifies that certain authority generally available to the Secretary of Labor with respect to the enforcement of such labor standards shall also apply to these requirements of this title.

Section 608. Appropriations:

This section would authorize to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, and would provide that all funds so appropriated would remain available until expended. Funds could, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

For fiscal year 1966, it is currently estimated that appropriations will be requested in the amount of $100 million for the purpose of making grants for basic water and sewer facilities as authorized by section 602, $50 million for the purposes of making grants for neighboring facilities as authorized by section 603, and $25 million for the purposes of making grants to help finance the advance acquisition of land as authorized by section 604.

TITLE VII—SECONDARY MARKET AND SPECIAL ASSISTANCE FUNCTIONS

Section 701. Increase in FNMA special assistance authority:

This section would increase by approximately $2,345 million the amount of special assistance that the President of the United States can authorize the Federal National Mortgage Association to provide for housing and community development.

Under its special assistance program, the FNMA makes commitments to purchase and purchases FHA- and VA-backed mortgages financing housing for low- and moderate-income families, in urban renewal areas, for the elderly, and for disaster victims, and other special types of housing designated by the President as being housing that needs special assistance. Under other provisions in the bill, special assistance to FHA-insured mortgages financing certain land development would also be authorized.

The increase in special assistance authority would be provided by subsection (a) raising the present $1.7 billion authorization in section 305(c) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act by $150 million on the date of enactment of the bill, and by an additional $550 million on July 1, 1966, $700 million on July 1, 1967, and by $725 million on July 1, 1968.

Subsection (b) would provide approximately $220 million more authority, to be merged with the authority in section 305(c) of the Charter Act, by transferring to that section the balance of the amount of special assistance authorized by section 305(f) for housing for the military, AEC, and NASA financed with FHA title VIII insured mortgages. Approximately $220 million (out of the $500 million originally authorized for title VIII housing) is unused and would be made available to the President for special assistance as he may authorize.

Section 702. FNMA purchase of mortgages held by Federal instrumentalities:

This section would authorize FNMA to purchase from other Federal agencies housing mortgages they have insured or guaranteed and offered to FNMA for purchase, or housing mortgages securing loans made by the Federal agencies. A provision now in the Charter Act would be deleted which generally prohibits FNMA from purchasing any mortgage offered by or covering property held by a Federal instrumentality.

This section would permit steps to centralize the Government's ownership and management of housing mortgages to the extent determined desirable from time to time. To this extent, such centralization could promote economy in the maintenance of mortgage servicing facilities by Government agencies. In addition, FNMA through its marketing facilities (including the new pooling and trust certificate program authorized by the Housing Act of 1964) could sell the mortgages or participations therein to private investors and thus substitute private financing for Treasury financing where the present owning agencies cannot make such sales.

TITLE VIII—OPEN-SPACE LAND AND URBAN BEAUTIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT

Section 801. Revision of title heading and findings and purpose: This section would add reference to "urban beautification and improvement" to "open-space land" in the heading of title VII of the Housing Act of 1961, to take into account the proposed new program (described below) of grants for urban beautification and improvement. It would also amend the congressional findings and statement of purpose of the title to refer to the need both for this proposed program and for the proposed new program (also described below) to provide open-space land in built-up urban areas.

Section 802. Increased grant level for preservation of open-space land: This section would change the grant levels of the present open-space program from 20 and 30 percent to 30 and 40 percent, respectively. This program has, in the about 3½ years since its enactment in the Housing Act of 1961, increasingly demonstrated its potential for meeting the critical need for additional open-space acquisition in urban areas. The relatively low grant level has, however, substantially impeded use of the program, and this is particularly harmful in many localities where prompt local action is essential in order both to help control urban development and to conserve public funds in the face of sharply rising land costs.

It is important, also, to increase the grant percentages at this time so that the Federal assistance made available for parks and other open space in urban areas through this program may be on a par with that made available through the new recreation-area programs authorized in the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965. That act authorizes up to 50 percent grants for acquisition and development of outdoor recreation areas but such grants will, by administrative action, be limited to 40 percent, the same as the proposed higher grants under this program.

Section 803. Substitution of appropriation authority, without dollar limitation for grant contract authority: This section would remove the present $75 million contract authority for grants under title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 and substitute authority for appropriation of such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the title, without dollar limit. This authorization would apply to the present program of grants for urban open-space preservation, as well as to the two proposed new grant programs for provision of open space in built-up urban areas and for beautification and improvement of urban public land. It would also apply to the present authorization for the Administrator to provide technical assistance, undertake studies, and publish information in connection with activities carried on under the title.

Fifty million dollars was originally authorized for the present open-space preservation program, by the Housing Act of 1961, and this amount was increased to $75 million in the Housing Act of 1964. Although this authorization has been in the form of contract authority, funding for the program has, since its inception, been in the form of advance appropriations for liquidation of this authority, with a restriction on use of any contract authority in excess of such appropriations, through earmarking of funds appropriated for administrative expenditures. This method of funding is in effect equivalent to that provided under a regular authorization for appropriations, and if the Congress intends that the program continue to be so funded, it would be desirable to amend the statute as proposed in order more clearly to express the congressional intent.

The President's budget for fiscal year 1966 proposes a level of $60 million to carry out activities under the open-space title. This would in any case require additional appropriation authority of $31.3 million, since all but $28.7 million of the presently authorized $75 million has been appropriated and is expected to be committed by June 30, 1965.

Section 804. Grants for provision of open-space land in built-up urban areas:

This section would add a new program to title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 to provide Federal grants to States and local public bodies to assist them in providing open-space land through the acquisition of title to, or other permanent interests in, developed land in built-up portions of urban areas. A grant could not exceed 40 percent of the cost of acquiring the interest in the land and the cost of demolishing and removing those improvements on the land which were inappropriate to its use as permanent open-space land. These grants could only be made where the governing body of the locality determines that adequate open-space land cannot effectively be provided through use of existing undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped land and the Administrator determines that the proposed acquisition will assist in the comprehensively planned development of the locality.

The present title VII program is limited to assisting in the acquisition of lands that are undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped. This limitation has helped to prevent acquisitions in the more densely developed, "built-up" portions of urban areas. The proposed new program would help to correct this situation and would provide additional assistance for such acquisitions, in the form of 40 percent grants, in recognition of the higher cost of acquiring and clearing developed land.

This program could assist, for example, in the acquisition of land for pedestrian malls, waterfront restoration, or neighborhood "commons" and play areas. More such areas are needed to enhance the physical environment of our urban communities and to make them more attractive places in which to live, work, and play.

Federally financed relocation payments would be authorized in connection with projects assisted under the program. This would provide for any displaced individuals, families, business concerns, and nonprofit organizations the same benefits already provided in connection with the urban renewal and public housing programs.

It is contemplated that acquisitions would be of relatively small size, and in key locations which would assist in the comprehensively planned development of the locality.

As with the present program, land acquired under this program would have to be permanently retained as open space, and it would have to be demonstrated that the locality is making maximum efforts to acquire and preserve open-space land through other means, such as the acquisition and conversion of tax delinquent lands.

Since the usefulness of such open areas would depend in large part on how they are developed, the proposed program (described below) of grants for urban beautification and improvement would be especially useful in assuring the success of this program.

Section 805. Grants for urban beautification and improvement:

Subsection (a) of this section would add a new program to title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 authorizing matching grants to assist States and local public bodies in carrying out local programs for the greater use and enjoyment of open space and other public land in urban areas. The need for such assistance was recently emphasized by the President in his message on the state of the Union, where he pointed out that "Within our cities imaginative programs are needed to landscape streets and transform open areas into places of beauty and recreation."

The proposed local programs would, under criteria established by the Administrator, be required to (1) represent significant and effective efforts, involving all available public and private resources, for the beautification and improvement of public land in the locality and (2) be important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality. Assistance could be provided for eligible work on land acquired pursuant to the acquisition programs of title VII or on other public land such as streets, but the work could only be for the beautification of the land or its improvement for recreation or other open-space uses. Assisted activities could, for example, include tree planting and other landscaping on streets, park improvements, and renovation, and other substantial upgrading of selected outdoor public areas. Generally, no assistance would be provided for buildings. Only those small structures would be eligible which are incidental to proposed park or other open-space uses. Thus, toilet facilities or rain shelters might be assisted, but an activities center, museum building, swimming pool, or recreation equipment could not be.

Assisted activities would have to be capable of providing long-term benefit to the locality. Assistance would not, for example, be provided for the increased operating costs of keeping parks better lighted or more tidy. On the other hand, assistance could be provided for the cost of the lighting fixtures. Thus, it is anticipated that many of the assisted activities would be routine improvements, but which the proposed Federal assistance would enable the localities to undertake on a broader scale.

An important aim of the legislation would also be to encourage and assist local experimentation and innovation. To facilitate this, the Administrator would be authorized to make up to $5 million of grants, without the otherwise-required matching local grants, for projects which he determines to have special value in developing and demonstrating new and improved methods and materials for use in beautification and improvement activities. Under this provision localities could, for example, receive special assistance in providing outdoor facilities for art and technological exhibits or in holding a design contest for a downtown pedestrian mall.

Because of the special nature of these demonstration projects, they would not be subject to the local program and other usual grant requirements provided in this section. However, it is expected that grants under this provision would ordinarily be for less than 100 percent of cost, since allowance would be made for the continued benefit which the project might provide the locality.

The experience gained in these special demonstration projects could, in turn, be made available to other localities through the authority of the Administrator to undertake studies and publish information to carry out the purposes of the title.

A Federal grant could not exceed 40 percent of the amount by which the cost of the activities carried on by the applicant, during its fiscal year, under a local program has exceeded its usual expenditures for comparable activities during that year. The usual expenditures of the applicant for such activities would be determined in accord with administrative regulations based on the previous expenditures of the locality but taking into account, to the extent feasible, unusual circumstances affecting those expenditures.

Approval would be given in advance for the types of activities to be carried out and the overall amounts which could be spent, but a portion of each grant would be withheld until the required accounting at the end of the year. This procedure would help to assure that the Federal assistance is, in fact, provided only for additional local efforts.

Regulations would be established to assure that assistance under this program was not provided where grants were available under other Federal programs—for example, landscaping in connection with construction of federally assisted highways.

Subsection (b) of this section would remove the present prohibition for grant assistance, under title VII, for "development costs," since the proposed beautification and improvement grants will be, in effect, for "development." Grants in the present and proposed open-space acquisition programs could still not be used for development, because of the statutory language in each program specifying the purposes for which the grants may be used.

Also, the present prohibition would remain against grant assistance, under title VII, for "ordinary State or local governmental expenses." Grants would be provided only for the direct cost of carrying out the proposed acquisition or other activities, rather than for associated administrative expenses.

Section 806. Use of funds for studies and publication: This section would permit the Housing Administrator to use open-space grant appropriations, not to exceed $100,000 per year, for undertaking and publishing open-space surveys and other studies in connection with activities under this title. Such studies and publications are already authorized under present law but must now be financed through separate appropriations. This makes it difficult, for example, to take advantage of study opportunities which arise after submission of the budget justification for that year. The undertaking of studies and the publication of information in connection with these activities is a function that should be carried out on a continuing basis as the needs and opportunities appear. Such a continuing approach is best achieved through the proposed limited authorization to utilize program grant funds.

Section 807. Conforming amendments:

This section would make necessary technical and drafting amendments in the present language of title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 to provide for inclusion of the two proposed new grant programs described above.

Under subsection (a), the section heading of the present grant program, now entitled "Federal Grants," would be changed to "grants for preservation of open-space land" in order to avoid confusion with the proposed new program of "grants for provision of open-space land in built-up urban areas."

Under subsection (b), applicants under the open-space preservation program would continue to be approved by the Administrator as capable of carrying out the provisions and purposes of that program rather than, in addition, the provisions of the other new programs in the title.

Subsection (c) would broaden the language of the present requirement, in section 702(e), under which the Secretary of the Interior furnishes the Administrator information on recreational planning. It would require such information with respect to areas receiving assistance under the new urban beautification and improvement program, as well as areas where open-space land is acquired.

Subsection (d) would restrict the application of the requirements, in section 704, under which the Administrator must approve conversion of open-space land for which a grant has been made under this title to other uses and require assurance that equivalent other open-space land is provided. Such requirements are not appropriate for open-space land which receives assistance for beautification and improvement, rather than acquisition.

TITLE IX—RURAL HOUSING

Section 901. Loans for previously occupied buildings and minimum site acquisition: This section would amend section 501 of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans to farmers and other rural residents for the purchase of previously occupied dwellings and related facilities and farm service buildings and for minimum adequate building sites.

Section 902. Interest rate on direct rural housing loans: This section would increase to 5 percent the maximum interest rate on direct loans under section 502 of the Housing Act of 1949, except for loans to elderly persons in accordance with section 501(a)(3) and loans in accordance with sections 503 and 504, which would remain at 4 percent. It would also authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to charge fees on all title V loans.

Section 903. Insured rural housing loans: Subsection (a) of this section would add new sections 517 and 518 to the Housing Act of 1949. The new section 517 would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to insure loans, and make loans to be sold insured, in accordance with section 502, except that—

1. Insured section 502 loans to persons of low or moderate income would bear interest not above 5 percent and be limited to adequate housing modest in size, design, and cost and to an aggregate of $300 million per fiscal year.

2. For insured section 502 loans to persons other than those with low or moderate incomes the Secretary would be authorized to charge interest and insurance or service charges at rates comparable to those charged under section 203 of the National Housing Act.

The new section 517 would authorize a new revolving fund, the "rural housing insurance fund," to finance insured section 502 loans and to be used in lieu of the agricultural credit insurance fund for section 514 domestic farm labor housing and section 515(b) elderly rental housing loans.

It would also authorize the Secretary of Agriculture—

1. To make insured section 502 loans with insured lenders' funds, or to make them out of the fund for insurance and resale, within the range of market prices for comparable loans, and to repurchase loans for servicing or liquidation. Loans made out of the fund and held unsold could not exceed $100 million at any one time.

2. To retain a borrower's mortgage to secure his indemnity and other obligations to the Secretary under the loan, while the note was held by an insured investor.

3. To retain out of payments by a borrower on an insured loan an annual charge in an amount specified in the insurance agreement. Of any such charge, an amount not exceeding 1 percent of the unpaid balance of the loan would be available for deposit in the fund. Any remainder would be available for annual appropriation to administrative expenses of the Farmers Home Administration.

4. To borrow from the Treasury, at cost-of-money interest rates, to meet loan insurance obligations and to make other authorized expenditures from the fund. Such borrowing could not be made to provide capital for making loans or to restore losses from discounted sales.

5. To utilize the fund for the purposes— in addition to meeting loan insurance obligations and making loans for insurance and resale—of paying interest accruals on borrower payments before transmittal by the Farmers Home Administration to insured holders and of paying taxes, insurance, prior liens, and other expenses and advances to protect, service, collect, and liquidate the loans and security.

It would also authorize the Secretary to use the Rural Housing Insurance Fund and authority for insuring loans, or making loans to be sold insured, to finance housing and related facilities for domestic farm labor in accordance with section 514 and for senior citizens in accordance with section 515(b), not including the inconsistent provisions in these sections.

The new section 518 would group rural housing direct loans made under sections 502, 503, 504, and 515(a) of the 1949 act, collections therefrom, and funds available from appropriations or Treasury borrowings for such loans, into a new fund, the "rural housing direct loan account," to be used for making such loans and making repayments to the Treasury. It would also establish the interest rate on borrowings from the Treasury for the rural housing direct loan account at the same rate as provided in the new section 517(h) for borrowings for the rural housing insurance fund.

Subsection (b) would extend for 4 years, to October 1, 1969, the present unused balance of $101 million of the borrowing authority under section 511, as well as remove the present partial allocation to section 502 senior citizen loans exclusively.

Section 904. FNMA secondary market operations for insured rural housing loans: This section would authorize the Federal National Mortgage Association to include loans insured under title V of the 1949 act in its secondary market operations.

Section 905. Extension of rural housing authorizations: Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of this section would extend for 4 years, to October 1, 1969, the present authority:

1. For the Secretary of Agriculture to make section 503 loan contribution commitments;
2. For appropriations to finance section 504(a) grants, section 504(b) loans, section 516 assistance, and section 506 rural housing research and study programs; and
3. For making insured section 515(b) rental housing loans for elderly persons and families.

Subsection (b) would also raise to $50 million the authority for appropriations for section 516 assistance to provide low-rent housing for domestic farm labor.

Subsection (d) would extend the construction standards and technical services provisions of section 506(a) of the 1949 act to operations under the new provisions added by this title.

Section 906. Payment of interest to the Treasury on appropriations for rural housing loans: This section would direct the Secretary of Agriculture to pay into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury any surpluses from the rural housing insurance fund or direct loan account. Would also provide for payment to the Treasury of interest, at cost-of-money rates, on any portions of future appropriations to the fund or the account authorized for making loans, until returned to miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

TITLE X—MISCELLANEOUS

Section 1001. Increase in authorization for urban planning grants: This section would remove the dollar limit on the authorization for appropriation of funds for section 701 urban planning grants and authorize such additional funds to be appropriated as may be necessary to carry out the urban planning assistance program.

Under section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954, the Housing Administrator is authorized to make grants (generally not to exceed two-thirds of the estimated costs) to States and local planning agencies to assist in preparing comprehensive development plans and programs. Grants are made for comprehensive planning of small communities and counties, metropolitan areas and urban regions, States, and interstate regions.

Thus far, $86.325 million of the presently authorized $105 million have been appropriated. The program level for fiscal year 1966 is estimated at $35 million. Appropriation of $16.3 million in addition to the $18.675 million remaining in unused authorization will be required to fund the program at this level. Additional funds would still, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

Section 1002. Increase in authorization for Federal-State training programs: This section would remove the dollar limit on the authorization for appropriation of funds for grants for Federal-State training programs and would authorize such additional funds to be appropriated as may be necessary to carry out the programs. Additional funds would, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

Under part I of title VIII of the Housing Act of 1964, the Housing Administrator is authorized to make matching grants to States to assist them in developing special training programs for technical and professional people who are, or are likely to be, employed by a governmental or public body which has responsibilities for community development. These matching grants may also be used to support State and local research on housing, public improvement programs, code problems, efficient land use, urban transportation, and similar community development problems.

It is estimated that $10 million in matching grants will be made under this program in fiscal year 1966. The Housing Act of 1964 authorized the appropriation of $10 million for such grants. Of this $10 million authorization, $5 million will be requested by the Housing Agency as a supplemental appropriation for fiscal year 1965, and $5 million will remain available for appropriation. To fund an estimated program level of $10 million for fiscal year 1966, appropriation of $5 million, in addition to the $5 million in unused authorization, will be required.

Section 1003. Increase in authorization for public works planning advances:

This section would remove the existing dollar limitation on the amount that may be appropriated for the public works planning fund and authorize such additional funds to be appropriated to the fund as may be necessary to carry out the planning advance program. Additional funds would still, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

It is estimated that $25 million in planning advances will be made in fiscal year 1966. The Housing Act of 1964 authorized the appropriation of $20 million to the public works planning fund (in addition to amounts previously authorized and which had been appropriated). Of this $20 million in new authorizations provided by the Housing Act of 1964, $10 million has been appropriated and $10 million remains available for appropriation.

Repayments to the funds, during fiscal year 1966 (which are available to make planning advances) are estimated at $10 million. To fund the estimated program level of $25 million for fiscal year 1966, appropriation of $5 million, in addition to the $10 million in existing authorization and the estimated $10 million in repayments, will be required.

Under section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954, the Housing Administrator is authorized to advance interest-free funds to States, municipalities, and other public agencies to help finance the cost of planning various public works and facilities. These advances become repayable in whole or in part when construction of the public work planned is started.

Through the end of December 1964, a total of 3,817 applications for approximately $92 million have been approved under the program. The estimated cost of the projects aided by these public works planning advances totals $5.56 billion. As of the same date, 3,360 plans involving Federal advances of $84 million have been completed and 1,186 advances for $31 million have been repaid.

Section 1004. Advisory committees—technical provision: This section would delete an obsolete provision from section 601 of the Housing Act of 1949. The provision deleted exempts a member of an advisory committee appointed by the Housing and Home Finance Administrator or the heads of any of the constituents of the Housing Agency from certain cited conflict-of-interest laws. This provision was made obsolete and no longer necessary by section 2 of Public Law 87-849. That law enacted new provisions which accomplish the same purpose.

Section 1005. Public facility loans to non-profit corporations: This section would permit the Administrator to make loans under the public facility loans program to private nonprofit corporations to finance the construction of works for the storage, treatment, purification, or distribution of water; sewage, sewage treatment, and sewer facilities to serve small communities (with a population of less than 10,000) if he determines no existing public body is able to construct and operate such facilities.

Section 1006. FHA conforming amendments: This section would amend various sections of the National Housing Act to make their provisions conform to the provisions in title II of this bill with respect to the consolidation of FHA insurance funds.

Section 1007. Repeal of special provision in Urban Mass Transportation Act: This section would repeal a provision in the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, which requires that contractors, in providing facilities or equipment which have received loan or grant assistance under the act, "shall use only such manufactured articles as have been manufactured in the United States." There is no other Federal matching grant program which contains such a requirement. The President, in approving the Urban Mass Transportation Act, expressed hope that the provision would be repealed and said that it is incompatible with the trade policy this Nation is pursuing under the Trade Expansion Act.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, there will be other morning hour business which can be conducted after 1 o'clock. But it has been agreed on both sides of the aisle that the Senate would recess at 12 o'clock until 1 o'clock in order that Senators who desire to attend the reenactment of the second inaugural address of Abraham Lincoln may attend that ceremony, which will commence immediately. Senators desiring to attend the ceremony should leave by the door on the east side, where a representative of the Sergeant at Arms will conduct them to seats reserved for them. When the Senate returns I hope that Senators will understand that we shall then seek to offer them the opportunity to conduct further morning hour business if they so desire.

RECESS

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 1 p.m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 1 minute p.m.) the Senate took a recess until 1 p.m.

At 1 o'clock p.m., the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey, in the chair).

EXTENSION OF THE BOUNDARIES OF THE KANIKSU NATIONAL FOREST IN THE STATE OF IDAHO

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of calendar

No. 99, Senate bill 435, and that the bill be laid down and made the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 435) to extend the boundaries of the Kaniksu National Forest in the State of Idaho, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with an amendment on page 2, at the beginning of line 23, to strike out "such funds as are needed to carry out the purposes of this act." and insert "not to exceed $500,000 to carry out the purposes of this act."; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, to promote protection and conservation of the outstanding scenic values and natural environment of Upper Priest Lake in Idaho and lands adjacent thereto for public use and enjoyment, the boundaries of the Kaniksu National Forest are hereby extended to include those of the lands hereinafter described which are not now within such boundaries. In order that they may be managed under the principles of multiple use and sustained yield, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to acquire the following lands at their fair market value:

Township 63 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian:

section 18, southeast quarter southeast quarter;

section 19, northeast quarter northeast quarter, lot 3 (southeast quarter northeast quarter);

section 20, southwest quarter northwest quarter;

section 33, lot 1 (northeast quarter northwest quarter), lot 2 (southeast quarter northwest quarter), lot 3 (northeast quarter southeast quarter), lot 6 (southeast quarter southwest quarter), west half southwest quarter northeast quarter, west half northwest quarter southeast quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter.

Township 63 north, range 5 west, Boise meridian:

section 24, northeast quarter northeast quarter, east half northwest quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter northeast quarter southwest quarter northeast quarter, northwest quarter southeast quarter northeast quarter, lot 2 (northeast quarter southeast quarter northeast quarter), lot 3 (northeast quarter southeast quarter southeast quarter northeast quarter).

Sec. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $500,000 to carry out the purposes of this Act.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, S. 435 is a bill to preserve, in its natural environment, Upper Priest Lake in Idaho by extending the boundaries of the Kaniksu National Forest.

It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire 417 acres of privately owned land on the lakeshore—now threatened with commercial development—and include them in the Kaniksu National Forest.

Mr. President, this is one of the most beautiful small lakes in the Nation. It is a gemlike body of water less than 4 miles long and three-fourths of a mile wide in northern Idaho not far from the Canadian border. It is encircled by evergreen forests and rugged mountains. And its beauty is unmarred by any type of commercial development. It is true wilderness, and no road or trail penetrates to the lake. It is only approachable by the Thoroughfare River, a meandering stream which connects it to Priest Lake proper.

The west side of the lake is part of the Kaniksu National Forest, and the east side is owned by the State of Idaho, with the exception of three separate and privately owned parcels.

Enactment of this legislation is urgent, because the owners of a 140-acre parcel have planned to subdivide it for cabin sites. It has been only through the intervention of a national semiscientific organization, Nature Conservancy, that this has been avoided. This organization, working closely with the Idaho Wildlife Federation which has fought off commercial development for 4 years, provided a loan to the owners to buy a year's time in which to save the lake. The owners have agreed to negotiate for the disposition of the land. However, the loan time is up this summer, emphasizing the need for early legislative authority to provide the Secretary of Agriculture with the means to acquire the property. The bill, as reported by the Interior Committee, authorizes an expenditure up to $500,000 for this purpose.

The bill, which is cosponsored by my colleague [Mr. JORDAN], is similar to one which I introduced last August. The Department of Agriculture issued a favorable report, as it has on this bill, and at my request field hearings were held in Idaho in October by the Senate Public Lands Subcommittee under the able chairmanship of the distinguished senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. BIBLE]. Nearly all witnesses were in favor of saving Upper Priest Lake.

The Bureau of the Budget has no objection to this bill.

There is an urgency for passage of S. 435, in order that we save for future generations what has been described as "one of the most beautiful places left in the world."

Mr. President, as I have said, I am joined in the cosponsorship of the bill by my colleague from Idaho [Mr. JORDAN]. The bill was first introduced last year, and in August of last year I made an explanatory statement. I ask unanimous consent that that statement be printed in the RECORD together with a letter of endorsement and support for the proposed legislation received by the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs from Orville Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture, and a letter from Phillip S. Hughes, of the Budget Bureau, dated February 24.

There being no objection, the statement and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAST CHANCE TO SAVE UPPER PRIEST LAKE

(By Senator FRANK CHURCH)

[In the Senate of the United States]

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, recently, an American wrote me from the Punjab Club, Lahore, Pakistan, to enter into a contest of words: Is Upper Priest Lake one of the most beautiful places "in Idaho," "in the country," or "in the world"? The writer, Mrs. E. J. Peterson, declared it to be "one of the most beautiful places left in the world," and I am prepared to agree with her.

But before long it may not be, and that is why Mrs. Peterson wrote as she did.

"I hope," she said, "that this land will be * * * kept like it is. * * * It would be a shame not to keep it wild."

Nearly everyone in northern Idaho and eastern Washington would agree, and millions more would also if they knew why Upper Priest Lake is endangered.

Mr. President, I should like to tell that story to the Senate at this time.

Upper Priest is a small lake, less than 4 miles long and three-fourths of a mile wide, located near the Washington State border and within walking distance of Canada, in the panhandle of northern Idaho. The panhandle is dotted by lakes, but Upper Priest is the only left which has not felt the permanent imprint of man. It is without commercial development of any sort; it is as wild and natural as God made it.

VISITING UPPER PRIEST

The lake is surrounded on three sides by rising mountains, but the unusual thing about Upper Priest is that, unlike so many similar lakes, one need not cross the mountains to get there. Thousands come there easily each year over a gentle water route.

We can understand something about the special attraction of this route from the description given it by Art Manley, vice president of the Idaho Wildlife Federation, a man who has worked tirelessly to save the lake:

"There is neither road nor trail to the little lake but the approach is easy and scenic, via the Thoroughfare, a lazily meandering stream just deep enough for most outboard motorboats and wide enough to permit one boat to pass another. The Thoroughfare provides a study in nature itself. It is protected by tall, stately white pines, alpine fir, spruce, western redcedar, the light green larch, cottonwoods and many, many other trees, bushes, and flowering vines, the trees often casting their shadows across the entire width of the clear, blue water of the Thoroughfare."

Once inside the lake, the reason for preserving it becomes even more apparent. The air is unusually tranquil, and the lake surface, protected by the mountains, is smooth enough to see the cutthroat trout jumping at great distances. The shore is lined by plants and intermittent sandy beaches which serve as the threshold to an unbroken forest, luxuriant with such a diverse combination of evergreen and deciduous trees as to make a necklace for the lake in autumn of brilliant, splashing color.

In the Selkirk Mountains, above the lake, roam a herd of rare mountain caribou, thought by many to be the last surviving band south of Canada. Mountain goat also inhabit the high country and deer, bear, and moose can be seen occasionally at the water's edge. The giant Mackinaw trout, the landlocked Kokanee salmon, and the rainbow trout inhabit the lake's clear waters.

Two well-concealed campgrounds and an emergency fireguard station are the only permanent evidence of man's intrusion on this scene—at least as of today.

THREAT TO UPPER PRIEST

The west side of the lake is part of the Kaniksu National Forest; the east side is owned by the State of Idaho, with the exception of three separate privately owned parcels. From at least one of these parcels, the sound of bulldozers and hammers may soon disturb the calm, and the day may not be far off when the shoreline will be studded with private boat docks. For the owners of this 140-acre parcel have announced their intention to subdivide their land for cabin sites. For nearly 4 years, the Idaho Wildlife Federation has sought to avoid this kind of commercial development. Earlier this year, when it looked as if all was lost, a national semiscientific organization, Nature Conservancy, came to the rescue, just as it has done at dozens of other beauty spots throughout the United States. The organization extended a loan to the owners, without interest, in order to buy an extra 10 months' time to save the lake. After that, the land will go up for sale.

As Art Manley has written for the Idaho Wildlife Federation:

"In spite of our very best efforts, we have failed * * * to solve the problem on a local or State level. The owners cannot give us another 4 years. We believe there is no further hope except through Federal help. And so, we are asking today—urgently for that help."

SAVING THE LAKE

It is for this reason, Mr. President, that I am today introducing a bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire these private inholdings at their fair market value. They can then be incorporated into the Kaniksu National Forest and managed so as to protect and conserve the scenic values of Upper Priest Lake for the use of all the public.

I use the phrase "all the public" advisedly, since such a description is appropriate for this jewel of a lake.

Upper Priest is less than 2 hours' driving time from Spokane, the largest city between the Pacific coast and the Midwest. It is estimated that nearly a million tourists traverse the general area each year. Probably no wilderness proves more easily or enjoyably accessible than for those who come to Lower Priest Lake to take a pleasant boat ride through the Thoroughfare, to Upper Priest.

This fact is not lost to those who, like myself, are also concerned with stagnant economic conditions in northern Idaho. Paradoxically, excepting Upper Priest Lake from commercial development has distinct economic value.

In a report made at my request, the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation concluded that preserving Upper Priest in its natural state was important for increasing tourism. "Scenic Upper Priest Lake appears ideal as a natural wilderness-type recreation area."

The report states, and keeping it that way is necessary for "continued expansion of tourism creation. So preserved, Upper Priest Lake could be one of the feature attractions of the panhandle area."

This is but another reason that the threat to Upper Priest has attracted so many to its cause. But the primary reason is that the lake means so much to the people who have been there. They have found it a place to escape from the punishing pace of daily life, free from the encroachment of cabins, docks, or automobiles. In an area where the great outdoors is everywhere, Upper Priest still is unique, an accessible touchstone with a peace no longer found in larger, commercial recreation areas.

The president of the University of Idaho, D. R. Theophilus writes:

"This is a wonderful lake, and I hope that my grandchildren can see it as I have seen it."

The Honorable Don Maynard, representative from Bonner County, says in the same spirit:

"It would be wonderful if we could keep this property just as the good Lord made it."

Judge Frances Sleep, of Sandpoint, tells what Upper Priest symbolizes for her in a manner which speaks for a great many people. She writes:

"I have lived my life in Bonner County. I have seen many changes take place in our area. As a child it was fun to walk a couple of blocks from home in Sandpoint across a meadow to a free and uncluttered lakeshore to picnic or swim. But no more. There is very little public access to our big Pend Oreille nowadays. This is the price we pay

House of Representatives

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 1965

The House met at 11:15 o'clock a.m. The Reverend Father Morris N. Dummet, St. Michael's Church, New Orleans, La., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

God of our fathers, in whose name this Republic was born, we pray for the Members of this body in their many and grave responsibilities.

Help them in their offices, in committees, and, above all, in legislative session. May they never forget that what is said and done here is indelibly inscribed in Your infinite knowledge and wisdom. May they feel the weight of their responsibility before You, and remember the forceful influence of good example, that all who come to this august Chamber may have a stronger faith in government of the people, by the people, for the people.

May the Representatives so speak and act and vote that all may be inspired, rather than disillusioned, by what is accomplished. Almighty God, make Yourself real to these men, that each may feel You sitting beside him, and hear Your voice and win Your approval in all things.

So help them, Almighty God. This we ask in the name of Thy divine Son. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

U.S. PARTICIPATION IN THE INTER-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H.R. 45) to amend the Inter-American Development Bank Act to authorize the United States to participate in an increase in the resources of the Fund for Special Operations of the Inter-American Development Bank.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman give us some idea of the changes in the bill that were made in conference?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the conference report was signed by all of the conferees on the part of both Houses. However, I shall ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REUSS] to explain such changes as were made. There is no difference between the two Houses. All conferees signed the conference report, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, and Mr. REUSS will explain the differences.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REUSS. The conference report which is now before this body would change the version passed overwhelmingly in the House of Representatives in one and only one material particular. That particular is contained in amendment No. 2 in which we accept the Senate version. That would write into the law the so-called Hickenlooper amendment with which I am sure the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS] is familiar, which would make it clear that the U.S. executive director of the Inter-American Development Bank shall vote against any dollar loan to any Latin American country which has expropriated an American industry under improper circumstances or otherwise dealt unfairly with an American industry.

I should add that we on this side had assurances from the Secretary of the Treasury that the United States would in fact so vote, but it was not put in as a policy directive in the bill itself.

The effect of the amendment which we now ask you to accept is to put that right into the legislation itself.

Mr. GROSS. There is no change in the money figure?

Mr. REUSS. There is no change in the money figure; no, sir.

Mr. GROSS. And there are no other changes as between the two bodies?

Mr. REUSS. The only other change, which is a highly technical change, removed unnecessary quotation marks from one of the paragraphs. That is the only other change which this conference report would engraft upon the House passed bill.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I see no point in prolonging this. I want the Record to show that I am opposed to the conference report as I was opposed to gouging the taxpayers for another $750 million to be ladled to foreigners.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the statement is printed in the Record at page 3931, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the statement of the managers on the part of the House be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

(Mr. ARENDS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to ask the majority leader if he can inform us as to the legislative program for next week.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, as the Members know, in a short time there will be a ceremony reenacting the second inauguration of President Lincoln, which the Members of the House will attend. There will be no further program today, and we will have a pro forma meeting tomorrow.

The program for next week is as follows:

On Monday there will be two bills from the District of Columbia Committee: H.R. 4338, to authorize the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States to rent certain property; and House Joint Resolution 195, authorizing special regulations for the American Legion convention in 1966.

On Tuesday and Wednesday we will consider two unanimous-consent bills from the Committee on Education and Labor; namely, H.R. 2959, school construction under Public Law 815 in Puerto Rico; and H.R. 4717, to amend the Cultural Development Act.

For Thursday and the balance of the week, there will be House Concurrent Resolution 4 to establish a Joint Committee on the Organization of the Congress.

As the gentleman knows, conference reports may be brought up at any time, and any further program will be announced later.

Mr. ARENDS. I thank the gentleman.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of next week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

COMMEMORATION OF THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE 2D INAUGURATION OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

(Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, as the majority leader stated, at noon ceremonies will begin in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the 2d inauguration of Abraham Lincoln. I hope all Members will have the opportunity to attend that ceremony at the east front of the Capitol. I urge the Members to encourage their office force to attend this ceremony. Not only are the Members of Congress invited to attend the ceremony, but the public as well.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONNECTION WITH THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE 2D INAUGURATION OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings in connection with the commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the 2d inauguration of Abraham Lincoln be printed in full in the body of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the membership of the House attend the ceremonies or are we going as individuals?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say that the Members will attend individually.

Mr. ARENDS. I thank the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1965

(Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today the administrationsponsored urban development bill of 1965. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARRETT] is also introducing it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and that I may be permitted to insert at this point in the RECORD the bill and a summary and discussion of the merits of the bill, and that immediately following that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARRETT] be permitted to extend his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill would carry out the legislative recommendations of the President with respect to the new and existing programs discussed in his March 2 message to the Congress on "The Problems and Future of the Central City and its Suburbs."

We have all often heard repeated frightening statistics about the ever-increasing size of our cities and other urban areas and of their great and growing problems. I feel, however, that some of us may have lost sight of the nature of this challenge of our cities. The President has not, and I believe that we can all again vision an inspiration from his message. As he said:

Let us be clear about the core of this problem. The problem is people and the quality of the lives they lead. We want to build not just housing units, but neighborhoods; not just to construct schools, but to educate children; not just to raise incomes but to create beauty and end the poisoning of our environment. We must extend the range of choices available to all our people so that all, and not just the fortunate, can have access to decent homes and schools, to recreation and to culture. We must work to overcome the forces which divide our people and erode the vitality which comes from the partnership of those with diverse incomes and interests and backgrounds.

The President's legislative proposals would carry out this approach. They would provide special assistance for many persons who specially need it—the elderly, those facing displacement in urban renewal areas, and those unable to afford decent housing. They would provide additional assistance and encouragement for the beautification of our towns and cities, and for the provision of additional parks and recreation areas. They would help to stem the wasteful and haphazard expansion of our suburbs, and encourage the establishment of subdivisions and communities which can offer more to their residents—both in utility and enjoyment.

This is an inspiring bill, and one which I am proud to sponsor. It presents both special opportunities, and special challenges to the housing industry, which will, of course, be intimately involved in the increased construction and rehabilitation efforts for which the President is asking. The bill is a realistic and workable one, and I am sure that this strong and important industry will be able to support it fully.

Mr. Speaker, I am submitting for insertion in the RECORD a copy and summary of the bill:

H.R. 5840

A bill to assist in the provision of housing for low- and moderate-income families, to promote orderly urban development, to improve living environment in urban areas, and to extend and amend laws relating to housing, urban renewal, urban mass transportation, and community facilities

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965".

TITLE I—SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR DISADVANTAGED PERSONS

Financial assistance to enable certain private housing to be available for lower income families who are elderly, handicapped, displaced, or occupants of substandard housing

SEC. 101. (a) AUTHORITY TO MAKE PAYMENTS.—The Housing and Home Finance Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") is hereby authorized to make, and contract to make, annual payments to a "housing owner" on behalf of "qualified tenants," as those terms are defined herein, in such maximum amounts and under such circumstances as are prescribed in, or pursuant to, this section. In no case shall a contract provide for such payments with respect to any housing for a period exceeding forty years. The aggregate amount of the contracts to make such payments shall not exceed amounts approved in appropriation acts and shall not exceed $50,000,000 per annum prior to July 1, 1966, which maximum dollar amount shall be increased by $50,000,000 on July 1 in each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968.

(b) HOUSING OWNER.—As used herein, a "housing owner" shall mean a private non-profit corporation or other entity, a limited dividend corporation or other entity, or a cooperative mortgagor under section 221(d) (3) of the National Housing Act which, since the enactment of this Act, has been approved for mortgage insurance thereunder and has been approved for receiving the benefits of this section: Provided, That no housing owner receiving payments under this section may receive the benefits of the interest rate provided for in the proviso in clause (5) of section 221(d) of that Act.

(c) QUALIFIED TENANT.—As used in this section, a "qualified tenant" means any individual or family who has, pursuant to criteria and procedures established by the Administrator, been determined:

(1) to have an income below the amount required to obtain standards privately owned housing in the area that is conventionally financed or that is financed with a market interest rate mortgage insured under said section 221(d) (3), but above the amount which would be necessary for low-income families generally to obtain admission to public housing dwellings, in the same or a similar area, of a size comparable to the dwelling of the housing owner which is occupied, or to be occupied, by the qualified tenant; and

(2) to be one of the following—

(A) displaced by governmental action;

(B) 62 years of age or older in the case of an individual or, in the case of a family, to have a head who is, or whose spouse is, 62 years of age or over;

(C) physically handicapped; or regulations established by him, nor (2) the estimated amount of subsidy contracted for under the United States Housing Act of 1937 with respect to a dwelling unit of comparable size and type in the same or a comparable locality.

(e) CRITERIA AND PROCEDURES RELATING TO TENANT ELIGIBILITY, RENTAL CHARGES AND ANNUAL PAYMENTS. (1) For purposes of carrying out the provisions of this section, the Administrator shall establish criteria and procedures for determining the eligibility of occupants and rental charges, including criteria and procedures with respect to periodic review of tenant incomes and periodic adjustment of rental charges. The Administrator shall issue, upon the request of a housing owner, certificates as to the following facts concerning the individuals and families applying for admission to, or residing in, dwellings of such owner:

(A) the income of the individual or family; and

(B) whether the individual or family was displaced by governmental action, is elderly, is physically handicapped, or is occupying substandard housing.

(2) Procedures adopted by the Administrator hereunder shall provide for recertifications of the incomes of occupants, except the elderly, at intervals of two years (or at shorter intervals in cases where the Administrator may deem it desirable) for the purpose of adjusting rental charges and annual payments on the basis of occupants' incomes, but in no event shall rental charges adjusted under this section for any dwelling exceed the fair market rental of the dwelling.

(3) The Administrator may enter into agreements, or authorize housing owners to enter into agreements, with public or private agencies for services required in the selection of qualified tenants, including those who may be approved, on the basis of the probability of future increases in their incomes, as lessees under an option to purchase dwellings or cooperative ownership interests therein, and in the establishment of rentals. The Administrator is hereby authorized (without limiting his authority under any other provision of law) to delegate to any such public or private agency his authority to issue certificates pursuant to this subsection.

(f) WAIVER OF WORKABLE PROGRAM.—Section 101(c) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by inserting "(i)" after the phrase "a mortgage under" in the first proviso thereof and by inserting immediately prior to the colon at the end of the first proviso: "; or (ii) section 221(d) (3) of the National Housing Act if payments with respect to the mortgaged property are paid or to be paid under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, except that no such mortgage shall be insured, and no commitment to insure such a mortgage shall be issued, with respect to property in any community for which a workable program for community improvement was required and in effect at the time a contract for a loan or capital grant was entered into under this title, or a contract for annual contributions or capital grants was entered into pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937, unless there is a workable program for community improvement which meets the requirements of this subsection in effect in such community at the time of such insurance or commitment".

(g) REGULATIONS.—The Administrator is authorized to make such rules and regulations, to enter into such agreements, and to adopt such procedures as he may deem necessary or desirable to carry out the provisions of this section. Nothing contained in this section shall affect the authority of the Federal Housing Commissioner with respect to any housing assisted under this section and under section 221(d) (3) of the National Housing Act, including his authority to prescribe occupancy requirements under other provisions of law or to determine the portion of any such housing which may be occupied by qualified tenants.

(h) APPROPRIATIONS.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, including, but not limited to, such sums as may be necessary to make annual payments, pay for services provided under (or pursuant to agreements entered into under) subsection (e), and provide administrative expenses.

No mortgage shall be insured under this title after October 1, 1969, except pursuant to a commitment to insure issued before such date.

"SEC. 1004. The mortgage shall—

"(a) be executed by a mortgagor, other than a public body, approved by the Commissioner;

"(b) be made to and held by a mortgagee approved by the Commissioner;

"(b) The land development shall be undertaken in accordance with an overall development plan, appropriate to the scope and character of the undertaking, which—

"(1) has received all governmental approvals required by State or local law or by the Commissioner;

He may give such priority as he deems reasonable to land development undertakings that will, through open marketing of the developed land or other means, encourage broad participation by builders and that will serve families having a broad range of incomes.

Water and sewerage facilities

"SEC. 1010. After development of the land it shall be served by public systems for water and sewerage which are consistent with other existing or prospective systems within the area. If the Commissioner determines that public ownership of such a system is not feasible, he may approve an adequate privately or cooperatively owned system which will be regulated, during the period of such ownership, in a manner acceptable to him with respect to user rates and charges, capital structure, methods of operation, and rate of return. Approval of such system shall be given only where the Commissioner receives assurances, satisfactory to him, with respect to eventual public ownership and operation of the system and with respect to the conditions and terms for any sale or transfer.

Releases—Subordination of mortgage lien

"SEC. 1011. The Commissioner may, on such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, (1) consent to the release of a part or parts of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage, and (2) consent to the subordination of the lien of an insured mortgage upon a part or parts of the mortgaged property where the subordination is necessary to obtain construction financing for a dwelling on which an application for the insurance of permanent financing has been filed under any other title of this Act.

Premiums and fees

"SEC. 1012. The Commissioner shall collect reasonable premiums for the insurance of any mortgage under this title and make such charges as he determines are reasonable for the analysis of the land development plan and the appraisal and inspection of the property and improvements. On or before January 1, 1969, the Commissioner shall make a report to the Congress concerning the premium rates and other charges under this title that he estimates will be adequate to provide income sufficient for a self-supporting program.

"Insurance benefits"

"SEC. 1013. The provisions of subsections (e), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), and (n) of section 207 of this Act shall be applicable to mortgages insured under this title, except that as applied to such mortgages (1) any reference therein to section 207 shall be deemed to refer to this title, and (2) any reference to an annual premium shall be deemed to refer to such premiums as the Commissioner may designate under this title.

"Incontestability provisions"

"SEC. 1014. Any contract of insurance executed by the Commissioner under this title shall be conclusive evidence of the eligibility of the mortgage for insurance, and the validity of any contract of insurance so executed shall be incontestable in the hands of an approved mortgagee from the date of the execution of such contract, except for fraud or misrepresentation on the part of such approved mortgagee.

"Rules and regulations"

"SEC. 1015. The Commissioner is authorized to make such rules and regulations and to require such agreements as he may deem necessary or desirable to carry out the provisions of this title.

"Taxation provisions"

"SEC. 1016. Nothing in this title shall be construed to exempt any real property acquired and held by the Commissioner under this title from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

"Cost certification"

"SEC. 1017. (a) The Commissioner shall adopt such requirements as he determines necessary to assure, at reasonable intervals of time during land development and upon completion of such development, that the amount of the mortgage loan outstanding at each such interval does not exceed with respect to that portion of the land remaining under the lien of the mortgage: (1) 50 per centum of the Commissioner's estimate of the value of such remaining land before development; plus (2) 90 per centum of the actual cost of the development allocated by the Commissioner to such remaining land.

"(b) From time to time during and upon completion of the development, the Commissioner shall require the mortgagor to certify as to the actual costs of development of the land.

"(c) Certifications required pursuant to this section shall be accompanied by such data and records as the Commissioner shall prescribe.

"(d) A mortgagor's certification approved by the Commissioner shall be final and incontestable except for fraud or material misrepresentation on the part of the mortgagor.

"(e) As used in this section, the term 'actual costs' means the costs (exclusive of kickbacks, rebates or trade discounts) to the mortgagor of the improvements. These costs may include amounts paid for labor, materials, construction contracts, land planning, engineers' and architects' fees, surveys, taxes and interest during development, organizational and legal expenses, such allocation of general overhead expenses as are acceptable to the Commissioner, and other items of expense incidental to development which may be approved by the Commissioner. If the Commissioner determines there is an identity of interest between the mortgagor and the contractor, there may be included an allowance for contractor's profit in an amount deemed reasonable by the Commissioner."

Any contract of insurance executed by the Secretary shall be an obligation supported by the full faith and credit of the United States and incontestable except for fraud or misrepresentation of which the holder has actual knowledge. In connection with loans insured under this section the Secretary may take liens running to the United States notwithstanding the fact that the notes evidencing such loans may be held by lenders other than the United States. Of the charges retained by the Secretary, if any, not to exceed 1 per centum per annum of the unpaid balance of the loan shall be deposited in the fund. Any retained charges not deposited in the fund shall be available for administrative expenses, in carrying out the provisions of this title, to be transferred annually and become merged with any appropriation for administrative expenses of the Farmers Home Administration, when and in such amounts as may be authorized in appropriation acts.

"(j) The Secretary may also utilize the fund—

"(1) to pay amounts to which the holder of the note is entitled in accordance with an insurance or sale agreement under this section accruing between the date of any prepayment by the borrower to the Secretary and the date of transmittal of any such prepayments to the holder of the note; and in the discretion of the Secretary, prepayments other than final payments need not be remitted to the holder until due;

The form, denominations, maturities, and other terms and conditions of such notes shall be prescribed by the Secretary with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Each note shall bear interest at such rate as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average market yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturities comparable to the average maturities of the loans held by the Secretary in the Account, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of one percent, during the month of June preceding the fiscal year in which the loans were made. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any notes of the Secretary issued hereunder, and for that purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which such securities may be issued under such Act, as amended, are extended to include the purchase of notes issued by the Secretary. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes shall be treated as public debt transactions of the United States.

"(d) The Account shall remain available to the Secretary for the payment of interest and principal on notes issued by the Secretary to the Secretary of the Treasury under section 511 or this section, and for direct loans and related advances under this title in such amounts as are now authorized by law and in such further amounts as shall be authorized in appropriation acts. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1965

TITLE I—SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR DISADVANTAGED PERSONS

Section 101. Financial assistance to enable certain private housing to be available for lower income families who are elderly, handicapped, displaced, or occupants of substandard housing: This section would authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to undertake a program of rent supplements to serve people who are in need of standard housing and are in the lower income range above the level prevailing for admission to low-rent public housing and below that necessary to obtain standard private housing, including moderate-income housing financed with FHA-aided market-interest rate mortgages insured under section 221(d) (3) of the National Housing Act. Under the proposed program, rent supplements would be available with respect to housing to be built with the assistance of FHA-insured section 221(d) (3) market-interest rate mortgages and owned by private nonprofit corporations, limited dividend corporations, or cooperatives. Lower housing costs would be achieved for eligible occupants by rent supplement payments owner made directly to the project owner. Such payments for an occupant would be in an amount sufficient to reduce the rent to the level that the occupant could afford. If the income of the occupant (other than the elderly) later increased, the amount of the rent supplement payments would be reduced until the occupant could afford to pay the full rent, at which time the payments for that occupant would cease.

In addition to the income range requirement, eligibility for the rent supplementation aid would be restricted (1) to the elderly and the physically handicapped, (2) to those displaced by urban renewal and other public improvement programs, including code enforcement and (3) to those living in substandard housing. In serving these persons the program will also increase the supply of moderate-income private housing. The rent supplement payments that could be contracted for with respect to any project assisted under this section would be limited to a term of 40 years. The aggregate amount of such payments contracted for could not exceed amounts approved in appropriation acts nor $50 million per annum, but this limitation would be increased by $50 million on July 1 of each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968.

The amount of rent to be paid by an occupant would be 20 percent of income, except where the occupant obtains a lease with option to purchase either sales-type housing or a unit in a cooperative, in which case the rent or charges to be paid would be 25 percent of income. Sales-type housing could be provided in a rental project where units, such as row or detached houses, are rented initially but are designed so that they could later be transferred to individual ownership. Tenants selected for participation in lease-purchase arrangements would be only those with a potential for increased incomes for homeownership. When the income of an occupant has increased to the point that 25 percent of income would enable the occupant to assume ownership, this would be done generally with the aid of an FHA-insured section 221 home mortgage or, in the case of a cooperative dwelling, by changing his status from tenant of the cooperative to cooperating member.

Income ceilings and floors would be established for each area. In each area, the rent supplement payments could not exceed the public housing contractual subsidy amount for a comparable unit in the same or a comparable area. The income floor in any area would be the maximum income limit for admission of low-income families generally to public housing in that area.

The organizations owning the private projects assisted under the program would select the occupants, subject only to certain facts relating to eligibility as determined by the Housing Administrator or his delegatee. Prospective occupants would be referred by the housing owner to appropriate offices or agencies for the purpose of obtaining the Housing Administrator's certification as to facts concerning eligibility. More specifically, the certification would relate to the tenant's age or physical handicap where this is the basis for eligibility, or displacement, or occupancy of substandard housing. Certifications would also relate to incomes at initial occupancy and every 2 years thereafter, or more frequently if the Housing Administrator deems it desirable, except that recertifications after initial occupancy would not be required in the case of the elderly.

The amount of rent supplements to be paid to the project owner with respect to any occupant would be the difference between 20 percent of income (or 25 percent in the case of leases with option to purchase) and the full rent that is required under the market-interest rate FHA-insured mortgage financing. A given proportion of the units could be available for tenants or cooperative housing applicants who would not require any rent supplements, and the balance of the units would be available for tenants or cooperative housing applicants who would need rent supplements. Payment of the rent supplements would be delegated by the Administrator to the FHA.

A workable program will be required with respect to housing assisted under this section in any community where Federal assistance is being provided for code enforcement, urban renewal, or public housing, and with respect to such housing in any community for which a workable program was required and in effect at the time Federal assistance was provided for code enforcement, urban renewal, or public housing.

Administrative limitations on the per-unit mortgage amount would be applied in all areas. The per-unit mortgage limit for an area would be the same as is now used in the FHA-insured below-market interest rate program under section 221(d)(3). Under the latter program, the per-unit mortgage limit is that mortgage amount for a unit which would require a rent equal to 20 percent of the maximum income limit established for that area.

The rent supplement payments to be made under this program would help provide housing for people who are in need of standard housing and are in the income gap referred to above. In this income range are many of the 60,000 to 70,000 families displaced each year by public improvement actions and the approximately 10,000 a year whose incomes become too high for continued occupancy in public housing. Increasing code enforcement will increase public action displacements. Altogether, there are about 1.6

million elderly households (families or individuals) in this income gap, as well as about 1.8 million nonelderly nonfarm families living in substandard units.

The flexibility provided in rent supplement payments would enable people of various incomes to become occupants of the units to be provided without requiring an excessively high proportion of their income to be paid for rent. Moreover, after initial occupancy, the rent supplement payments would be adjusted at least every 2 years (except as to elderly) and paid only as needed and in the amounts needed.

The rent supplementation program would to a very great extent utilize private participation. The projects would be owned by private, nonprofit, limited dividend, or cooperative groups; constructed by private builders; and financed by private lenders with FHA-insured market interest rate mortgages.

Section 102. Extension of FHA section 221 programs: This section would continue for 4 years (from September 30, 1965, to October 1, 1969) the authority of FHA to insure mortgages under its section 221 programs of housing for lower income families. This includes extension of the "(d)(3) below market" rental housing and the "(d)(2)" low down-payment sales housing programs.

Section 103. Rehabilitation grants to homeowners in urban renewal areas: This section would authorize the limited use of urban renewal capital grant funds for rehabilitation grants to certain homeowners in urban renewal areas. These grants would be used only in hardship cases where no other means of financing is available to avoid displacement of the homeowners. These would be the few but important cases involving elderly and others where low interest rate loans (under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964) are not feasible for the purpose of financing rehabilitation necessary to make the home conform to public standards for decent, safe, and sanitary housing established by applicable codes or the urban renewal plan for the area.

In the case of an individual or family whose annual income is not more than $2,000, the amount of a grant could not exceed the lesser of (1) the actual and approved cost of the repairs and improvements, or (2) $1,000, or (3) that portion of the cost of such repairs and improvements that could not be paid for with any available loan which could be amortized, along with such individual's or family's other monthly housing expense, without requiring their monthly housing expense to exceed 25 percent of monthly income.

In other words, in the case of an individual or family whose income exceeds $2,000 a year, no grant could be made for that portion of the actual and approved cost of required repairs and improvements which could be paid for with a loan which could be amortized, along with that individual's or family's other monthly housing expense, with 25 percent of its monthly income. This limitation would require most individuals and families with incomes over $2,000 to finance the cost of such repairs and improvements with loans. In some cases, these loans can be obtained through private financing. For those unable to obtain private financing on reasonable terms, direct 3 percent interest rate loans will be made available under the provisions of section 312 referred to above.

Repairs and improvements for which grants authorized by this section could be made available include the repair or replacement of plumbing facilities, such as piped hot and cold running water, hot-water heaters, flush toilets, or bathtubs, and such basic rehabilitation work as is necessary to bring the dwelling unit up to the standards for decent, safe, and sanitary housing established by the local housing code or the urban renewal plan.

Successful execution of an urban renewal rehabilitation project requires, in addition to upgrading property in the project area, that displacement be minimized. Even with a 3-percent rehabilitation loan, many homeowners in urban renewal areas, especially elderly homeowners, cannot afford to make the necessary repairs and improvements to their properties.

At present, if such homeowners cannot bring their property up to the required standards, the property must be acquired and either be rehabilitated or torn down by the local public agency. It is clear that the grants authorized by this section would make it possible to carry out urban renewal projects with the acquisition of fewer properties (and consequently less displacement of families) than otherwise would be possible.

The grants authorized by this section for low-income individuals and families in urban renewal areas will assist in upgrading properties, as well as help to minimize displacement and its consequent problems. Aside from the social costs involved in displacing homeowners who cannot afford to repair and improve their property to required standards, there is the dollar cost involved in providing to these displaced homeowners the relocation payments authorized by the urban renewal law.

The cost of providing the rehabilitation grants authorized by this section would not exceed $2 to $3 million annually.

Section 104. Parity of treatment for the handicapped and elderly in public housing: This section would establish parity of treatment between the handicapped and elderly and thereby facilitate the provision of housing for handicapped families by making applicable to the handicapped certain existing provisions that are now available for housing for the elderly. It would increase by $1,000 ($500 in the case of Alaska) the maximum room cost limits applicable to public housing designed specifically for the handicapped; would authorize a special contribution of up to $120 per unit per year to dwelling units occupied by the handicapped; and would exempt the handicapped from the requirement that there be a 20-percent gap between the upper rental limits for admission to a proposed low-rent housing project and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing a substantial supply of standard housing.

The Housing Act of 1964 contained a number of provisions designed to facilitate the provision of housing for the handicapped, including a provision which made handicapped individuals eligible for admission to low-rent housing. However, while that act in general established parity of treatment between the handicapped and the elderly under relevant Federal housing programs, it did not fully extend this principle to the low-rent public housing program. Most significantly, the increased room cost limits applicable to housing designed specifically for the elderly and the special $120 contribution for the elderly were not extended to the handicapped. The handicapped family's need for specially designed housing and the very low incomes of many of these families, clearly justifies the extension of these benefits.

Estimates based on a national survey conducted by the Public Health Service from mid-1957 to mid-1961, showed that 5,306,000 persons age 15 to 62 were reported to have chronic conditions which limited them in the amount and kind of major activity, such as employment or housework, which they could undertake. An additional 1,204,000 persons in this age category were further restricted since they were unable to carry on a major activity.

The Public Health Service data also showed the family incomes applicable to the persons reported on. Relating this family income data to the $3,100 median income limit for admission to PHA-assisted low-rent housing in 1960 for an average-size family of 3 to 4 persons, it is estimated that 40 percent of the 5,306,000 families containing a person with chronic conditions limiting the amount and kind of major activity would be eligible for admission to low-rent housing. Twenty-six percent of these 5,306,000 families had incomes of less than $2,000. For the 1,204,000 families in which there was a person who was not just limited in capacity but who was unable to carry on a major activity about 55 percent would be eligible for low-rent housing and 40 percent had incomes of less than $2,000.

It will be noted, however, that many of these persons who are less than age 62 would qualify as "elderly" under the present provisions of the Housing Act of 1937, if their condition were such as to constitute a disability as defined in section 223 of the Social Security Act. This section of the bill would extend the same status and benefits to the others whose condition would render them "handicapped" within the meaning of section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, even though their condition does not constitute a disability as defined in section 223 of the Social Security Act.

Section 105. Relocation payments under Mass Transportation Act: This section would amend the relocation payment provisions of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 to make the payments to individuals, families, business concerns, and nonprofit organizations displaced by federally aided urban mass transportation projects after the date the bill is introduced the same as those provided under the urban renewal and low-rent public housing programs.

Under these provisions, payments to families and individuals could not exceed $200 for moving costs and property loss. In addition, families and elderly individuals displaced on and after the date of introduction of the bill could receive a relocation adjustment payment of up to $500 to assist them in relocating in standard accommodations.

For businesses, the payment could not exceed $3,000 for moving expenses and loss of property, except that where actual moving expenses are greater than $3,000 the maximum relocation payment to a business concern could not exceed the total of the actual moving expenses. By regulation this would be limited to $25,000 or actual expenses, whichever is less. Independent businesses displaced after the date of introduction of the bill which have average annual net earnings of less than $10,000 could receive additional readjustment payments of $1,500.

Under the present provisions of the mass transportation law the relocation payments may not exceed $200 in the case of an individual or family, or $3,000 (or, if greater, the total certified actual moving expenses) in the case of a business concern or nonprofit organization. By regulation, payments are limited to $25,000 or actual moving expenses, whichever is less.

TITLE II—FHA INSURANCE OPERATIONS

Section 201. Land development: This section would authorize Federal assistance to land development.

FHA mortgage insurance for land development: Subsection (a) would add a new title X to the National Housing Act which would authorize FHA mortgage insurance to assist in financing the cost of land development for residential and related uses. The activities financed under the title would include the acquisition of land and its improvement with water and sewer facilities, roads, streets, sidewalks, storm drainage facilities, other site improvement work, including certain community buildings approved by the Federal Housing Commissioner. These activities involve substantial capital requirements which the mortgage insurance would assist in meeting. The land made available for further development could vary in size and type from land suitable for a small, but well-planned neighborhood or to a suburban subdivision or an even more extensive new development, such as a new town.

During the next 10 years, new homes will be required for 15 to 20 million families. The new title X would help assure that sites are available for these homes at more economical prices and in communities which avoid the wasteful sprawl and disorganization of much recent urban development. Through adequate planning, home buyers can receive the benefit of good design and the conveniences and economies of adequate facilities for the community. This is true for well-planned small tracts and for more extensive developments.

In addition, in the case of extensive new development, there could be additional savings resulting from the ability to select land in areas now largely undeveloped and yet provide all needed facilities. The extensive new development can also more easily provide nearby industrial, commercial, civic, and recreational facilities, thereby minimizing transportation costs and efforts and, may also provide a full range of housing both as to incomes served and as to design.

The homebuilding and mortgage lending industries have shown sharply increasing interest in such extensive developments, and quite a few have been started throughout the Nation. The availability of FHA mortgage insurance would permit smaller land developers, and smaller local homebuilders and mortgage lenders to participate in this desirable trend on a cooperative basis, since at the present time the large capital requirements involved tend to limit the possibilities of participation to very large participants. The extension of the long tested device of FHA mortgage insurance for housing and related purposes to the land development stage would in effect bring FHA's services to private enterprise up to date in the light of contemporary trends in the homebuilding and mortgage lending industries.

Section-by-section summary of the proposed new title X of the National Housing Act

Section 1001. Purpose: The purpose of the title is: "to provide appropriate credit assistance in order that private enterprise may better serve the needs of a rapidly expanding urban population by means of additional well planned and adequately improved sites for the development of desirable residential neighborhoods, subdivisions, and sound communities."

Section 1002. Definitions: This section contains definitions of terms used in the title, including a definition that indicates the nature of eligible site improvements. The only buildings that would be eligible as site improvements are those needed for water supply or sewage disposal installations or such other buildings (except schools) to be jointly owned and maintained by the property owners as the Commissioner considers appropriate.

Sections 1002-1008. Basic conditions for insurance and land planning:

(a) Authority to issue mortgage insurance commitments under the title would expire on October 1, 1969.

(b) The insured mortgage loan could not exceed the lesser of (1) 75 percent of the Federal Housing Commissioner's estimate of the value of the property as of the completion of land development or (2) the sum of 50 percent of his estimate of the value of the land before development and 90 percent of his estimate of the cost of the site improvements. The insured mortgage amount outstanding could not exceed $25 million.

(c) The improvements and the development plan would be required to comply with all applicable State and local governmental requirements and with FHA's standards. The land development schedule would in all cases contemplate development within the shortest reasonable period consistent with sound development, and the development plan for the site would be required to be consistent with a comprehensive plan which covers, or with comprehensive planning being carried on for, the area in which the land is situated.

The comprehensive plans or planning would in all cases meet criteria established by the Housing and Home Finance Administrator, and would encompass activities such as those referred to in section 701(d) of the Housing Act of 1954. The applicable criteria would differ for different types of planned developments, for example—a suburban subdivision immediately adjacent to the developed outskirts of a city or an extensive new development with large residential, commercial and industrial areas to be situated in the countryside between two large cities. In the first case, the plan would need to demonstrate the adequacy of the community environment to provide an appropriate setting for the new subdivision, and that land uses and public facilities would be consistent with comprehensive planning for the entire urban area. In the second case, the criteria would contemplate a comprehensive plan for a larger urban area to demonstrate the interacting relationship between the new development and other communities in the urban area (including the two large cities), major employment centers, major open spaces and intercity transportation facilities.

In all cases the criteria to be established by the Administrator will have as their purpose reasonable assurance that the process of comprehensive planning for the area where the land is situated includes, as an integral part of that process, provisions for making the planning effective so that the proposed development assisted by the mortgage insurance will in actual fact be compatible with the present and projected development of the wider area where the land is situated.

In the case of a site proposed to be prepared for an extensive new development, the Administrator would review the site development plan (including the adequacy of housing to be provided for those employed within the planned development) for consistency with the overall comprehensive plan or planning for the area. However, in all ordinary cases this review would be the responsibility of the Federal Housing Commissioner.

All land development plans would be required to be acceptable to the Commissioner as providing reasonable assurance that the land development will contribute to the establishment or growth of a well-planned neighborhood, subdivision, or community which (i) will have a sound economic base and a long economic life, (ii) will be characterized by sound land use patterns, and (iii) will include or be served by such shopping, school, recreational, transportation and other facilities as the Commissioner deems adequate or necessary.

Section 1009. Priorities: The Commissioner would, in administering the program, encourage the maintenance of a diversified local home building industry and the inclusion in land development plans of a proper balance of housing for families of moderate or low income and he may give a priority among land development undertakings assisted under the title to those undertakings that will, through open marketing of the developed land or other means, encourage broad participation by builders and that will serve families having a broad range of incomes.

Section 1010. Water and sewerage facilities: The land after development would normally be expected to be served by public systems of water supply and sewerage. These would be consistent with other existing or prospective systems within the area. If the Commissioner finds that a public system is not feasible he may, under such assurances as he may require with respect to eventual public ownership and operation, approve an adequate privately or cooperatively owned system. Such a system would be required to be regulated in a manner acceptable to the Commissioner to protect the interest of consumers as to user rates and charges and methods of operation and also as to terms of any sale or transfer of the systems.

Sections 1011-1015. Miscellaneous: These sections relate to the subordination of mortgage liens, the assessment of reasonable premiums and fees, the payment of mortgage insurance benefits, insurance contract incontestability, and the issuance of FHA rules and regulations.

Section 1016. Taxation: This section provides that real property acquired and held by the Commissioner under this title shall not be exempt from State or local real estate taxation.

Section 1017. Cost certification: This section contains a requirement for certification by the mortgagor of actual development costs to be made from time to time to assure that the outstanding balances of loans insured under the title during the course of land development will be appropriately limited to reflect both the actual costs of development and the release of improved parcels from the lien of the mortgage.

Amendments to other provisions of law appropriate for conformity with the proposed new title X are made by subsection (b) of this section.

Paragraph (1) of subsection (b) would amend the labor standards provisions of the National Housing Act to make them applicable to work performed by laborers and mechanics employed in land development receiving financial assistance under the proposed new title X program.

Paragraph (2)(A) would amend the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act "Special Assistance" provisions to make inapplicable, in the case of title X mortgages on extensive new developments, the present statutory dollar ceilings that are based on mortgage amounts per family residence or per dwelling unit.

Paragraph (2)(B) would amend the definition of "mortgages" in the FNMA Charter Act to make it clear that the "home mortgages" referred to in the statement of purposes and elsewhere in that act include the proposed new land development mortgages as well as all other mortgages insured under the National Housing Act.

Paragraph (3) would amend the Federal Reserve Act to permit national banking associations to make loans secured by title X mortgages.

Paragraph (4) would amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 to permit Federal savings and loan associations to invest in title X insured mortgage loans to the extent permitted under Federal Home Loan Bank Board regulations.

Paragraph (5) would include among the eligible categories of planning grants under section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954, grants for planning for areas in which there is to be established an extensive new development on land improved or to be improved with assistance under the proposed new title X or on land acquired or to be acquired with assistance under section 202(b)(1) of the Housing Amendments of 1955.

Paragraph (6) would make the existing population limits in the public facility loans program authorized by section 202 of the Housing Amendments of 1955 inapplicable to financial assistance extended to municipalities or other political subdivisions in connection with an extensive new development on land improved or to be improved with assistance under the proposed new title X, or on land acquired or to be acquired by State land development agencies with assistance under section 202(b)(1) of the Housing Amendments of 1955.

State land development agencies

Subsection (c) of this section would authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to make loans to land development agencies (created or designated by or pursuant to State legislation) to finance the acquisition of land to be utilized in connection with development of well-planned residential neighborhoods, subdivisions, and communities. The land so acquired would be sold to private builders, and possibly after installation of basic public facilities, for the construction of well-planned developments. These may be residential neighborhoods, housing subdivisions or more extensive new developments.

The loans would be limited to an amount not exceeding the total cost as approved by the Administrator, of the acquisition of a fee simple or other interest in the land, including capitalization of interest for the term of the loan, and related expenses. The loans would be required to be reasonably secured and would be repayable within a period not exceeding 15 years at an interest rate of not more than the average annual interest rate on all interest-bearing obligations of the United States forming a part of the public debt, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 percent, plus one-half of 1 percent. For the current fiscal year this formula produces an interest rate of 4 percent.

Loans for land acquisition could not be made unless the Administrator determines that (1) private financing is not otherwise available on reasonable terms, (2) the development of a well-planned residential neighborhood, housing subdivision, or community on the land would be consistent with a comprehensive plan or with comprehensive planning, meeting criteria established by the Administrator, for the area in which the land is located, and (3) a preliminary development plan for the use of the land meets criteria which he has established.

The subsection further provides that the land acquired with Federal financial assistance under this subsection must be developed in accordance with a development plan approved by the Administrator. Sales of the land to private persons may not be for less than its fair value for uses in accord with the approved development plan. A development plan, wherever feasible in the light of current conditions, would be required to encourage the provision of sites providing a proper balance of types of housing to serve families having a broad range of incomes.

This program is designed to assist the State governments that wish to establish land development agencies in order to take advantage of the State government's unique powers to promote the planned development of future urban growth. As a governmental body with an area of jurisdiction beyond the confines of the geographical boundaries of a city, county, or special district, these State land development agencies could become focal points in the process of planning for attractive and efficient land development. Through these public land development agencies State governments, which are responsible for the well-being of all of its citizens, would become instrumental in fostering comprehensive planning of new areas expected to be populated within the foreseeable future.

State governments are already concerned with economic planning with respect to promoting industrial development and seeking to induce business concerns to locate (or relocate) their industrial plants within their States. Many State governments are also engaged in some form of "systems" planning in connection with determining the location of, and standards for, water and sewer facilities, location of State highways and the planning of other public works.

Once the public land development agencies are established, and after some experience with Federal loans indicates that this type of State activity is both practical and successful, private investor interest in the obligations issued by the State land development agencies can be expected. Such private funds are expected to be obtainable at interest rates below 4 percent.

Loans authorized by this subsection would be made from the revolving fund established by title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955 to finance the Public Facility Loan Program. No additional authorization is necessary. It is estimated that during the first full year of operations the amount of Federal funds committed for loans authorized by this subsection will not exceed $25 million.

Section 202. Extension of insurance authorizations: This section would continue for 4 years (from the present termination date of October 1, 1965, to October 1, 1969), the authority of FHA to (1) insure property improvement loans under its title I program, (2) insure housing loans and mortgages under all of its programs except those with independent termination dates, and (3) insure mortgages providing housing under its sections 809 and 810 programs for the military, NASA, and AEC. The section 221 program of mortgage insurance for housing for low- and moderate-income families would be continued for 4 years by another section in title I of the bill.

Section 203. Multifamily mortgage limits for four or more bedroom units: This section would permit an increased dollar limitation on the amount of a mortgage financing multifamily housing with dwelling units consisting of four or more bedrooms (except where the mortgage is insured under the section 810 program for the military). For example, under the regular rental housing program (section 207), the mortgage limit would be $21,000 per dwelling unit (an increase of $2,500) in the case of a family unit with four or more bedrooms. No change would be made in the existing limits for dwelling units containing no bedrooms, or one, two, or three bedrooms.

Prior to the Housing Act of 1964, the FHA was able to recognize additional rooms almost without limit as to number in the statutory per room multifamily mortgage limits. While the former per room limits too often led to superfluous additional rooms to the detriment of design, they did permit the recognition of the cost of additional bedrooms. The FHA has found, in working with the new family unit limitations added by the 1964 Housing Act, that they do not contain adequate provisions for financing projects with large units having four or more bedrooms. For this reason, an additional dollar limitation is being proposed for four or more bedroom units. This additional dollar limitation would enable the FHA to reflect properly the added cost of large units in the maximum mortgage amount and encourage production of accommodations for larger families where needed.

Section 204. Rehabilitation in urban renewal areas: The principal purpose of this section is to encourage more rehabilitation of housing for rent in urban renewal areas by removing an obstacle which unduly restricts the use of the FHA section 220 urban renewal housing program as it applies to nonoccupant owners of 1- to 11-family structures. Under the amendments of section 220 of the National Housing Act provided by this section a nonoccupant mortgagor who intends to hold 1- to 11-family housing for rent would be entitled to a larger loan amount which would be more in line with that now permitted where the housing consists of larger multifamily structures. The amendments would liberalize and make section 220 more workable for financing the construction, purchase, or rehabilitation of housing in urban renewal areas.

Section 220 would be amended (1) to increase the maximum amount of a mortgage which can be insured where the mortgagor is not an occupant of the property and intends to hold it for rent, and (2) where refinancing is involved, to permit existing indebtedness for improvement of the property to be included in the computation of the amount of a mortgage whether or not the indebtedness is secured by a mortgage against the property. Under existing law only indebtedness secured by the property may be included in the insured mortgage.

Under the proposed amendment, a non-occupant mortgagor could obtain an insured loan for rehabilitation, purchase, or construction of a 1- to 11-family property for rent in an amount which is 93 percent (now 85 percent) of the amount that an owner-occupant of the property could receive. Under existing law, an owner-occupant may obtain a rehabilitation loan which does not exceed (1) 97 percent of $15,000 of the estimated value before rehabilitation, plus 90 percent of estimated value above $15,000 but not above $20,000, plus 75 percent of value above $20,000, or (2) the estimated cost of rehabilitation plus cost of refinancing. For new construction the loan can be up to 97 percent of $15,000 or estimated replacement cost, plus 90 percent of cost above $15,000 but not above $20,000, plus 75 percent of the cost above $20,000.

Since under this section a nonoccupant mortgagor could obtain 93 percent of the amount that could be obtained under either of these formulas, the amount he would obtain would in effect be approximately 90 percent of the value or replacement cost of the property, depending upon the formula applicable. In no case involving refinancing of housing to be rented could the mortgage amount exceed the estimated rehabilitation cost plus refinancing.

Under the present law, a nonoccupant mortgagor of rental housing may obtain a mortgage in an amount only up to 85 percent of that permitted for an owner-occupant. In a case of refinancing and rehabilitation he may have a substantial equity in the property, but the 85-percent limit requires him to increase his cash outlay and equity more than he is willing to do.

A nonoccupant mortgagor who intends to sell the housing would continue, as the law presently provides, to be eligible for a mortgage up to 85 percent of the amount available for an owner-occupant, except that the mortgage amount can be the same as that permitted for an owner-occupant if the mortgagor places 15 percent of the mortgage proceeds in escrow pending sale to an acceptable owner-occupant within 18 months.

Section 205. Nondwelling facilities for urban renewal rental housing: A multifamily rental housing project in an urban renewal area financed with a mortgage insured by FHA under the section 220 urban renewal housing program would be permitted, by amendments in this section, to include more nondwelling facilities financed by the mortgage than under the existing law. Under the new provisions, the Federal Housing Commissioner could permit such nondwelling facilities as he deems desirable and consistent with the urban renewal plan to be included in the project. However, the project would have to be predominantly residential, and the Commissioner would also have to find that any nondwelling facilities included in the project would contribute to the economic feasibility of the project. To assure that commercial construction under this provision will be kept at a minimum, the Commissioner intends to require that proposed projects, involving more commercial facilities than are presently permitted, must be sent to the Washington office for review.

Under existing law the mortgage on a section 220 rental housing project can finance only such nondwelling facilities as the Commissioner deems adequate to serve the needs of the occupants of the property and of other housing in the neighborhood. This provision is too limited for housing in urban renewal areas where the facilities are essential to renting the housing but are economically feasible only if they can serve a larger area.

Sponsors would be more willing to undertake the provision of rental housing in urban renewal areas, particularly in areas where there has been extensive clearance of slums, if this provision is enacted because they would be assured of more rapid renting of the units in the project. Quick renting of housing in an urban renewal area depends on the availability of shopping centers and other commercial services and facilities of this nature.

Section 206. Larger insured mortgages for servicemen: The limit on the amount of an FHA section 222 insured mortgage, financing the home of a serviceman in the Armed Forces or the Coast Guard, would be increased from $20,000 to $30,000. This larger maximum mortgage is requested by the Department of Defense in order to make the special program for servicemen under that section more useful in providing housing. The downpayments required would be the same as those required under FHA's regular section 203(b) home mortgage insurance program—that is, 3 percent of the value of the property up to $15,000, 10 percent of the value of the property over $15,000 but not over $20,000, plus 25 percent of the value above $20,000.

Under the section 222 program the Department of Defense pays the mortgage insurance premium where a home is purchased by a serviceman with a mortgage insured under the program and so long as he is in the service. Over 75,000 servicemen currently have homes purchased with these mortgages. Around 276,000 additional homes are needed for career military personnel.

Under the present provisions of section 222 a mortgage cannot exceed $20,000 in amount. Housing construction costs and related expenses of homeownership have increased. The effective incomes of many career military members have also been increased by changes in the military compensation system. In high-cost areas in particular, the $20,000 limit does not provide an adequate or appropriate home, especially in the cases of servicemen above the grade of major or lieutenant commander.

Section 207. Refinancing of insured mortgages: This section would correct an omission in existing law. It would give FHA the same authority to insure mortgages executed for the purpose of refinancing existing mortgages insured under any FHA insured mortgage program as is now available for mortgages insured under sections 220, 221, 903, 908 and certain section 608 mortgages.

The principal amount of any refinancing mortgage cannot exceed the original principal amount or the unexpired term of the existing mortgage, except that if the Commissioner determines that an additional term will inure to the benefit of FHA the refinancing mortgage may have a term of not more than 12 years in excess of the unexpired term of the existing mortgage.

This refinancing authority serves a useful purpose in assisting mortgagors who encounter financial difficulties, especially those owning multifamily housing projects. It also serves to protect the interests of the mortgagee and of the FHA in marginal cases where the alternative to refinancing may be default and foreclosure. There does not seem to be any sound basis for limiting the authority, as is done by present law, to certain specified programs under the act.

Section 208. Consolidation of insurance funds: As a means of streamlining accounting procedures, with substantial economies in operations both in Washington and the field offices, this section would provide that all FHA insurance funds be consolidated into two funds: namely, a mutual mortgage insurance fund, and a general insurance fund. The mutual mortgage insurance fund would be continued in its present coverage and form, and all other insurance funds and accounts would be consolidated under a single insurance fund—the general insurance fund. All title I property improvement loans would be registered for insurance, and mortgages under all of FHA's insurance programs would be endorsed for insurance under the general insurance fund, except those mortgages committed and insured under the regular section 203 home mortgage insurance program. The assets and liabilities of all of the current funds and accounts except the mutual mortgage insurance fund would be transferred to and become the responsibility of the general insurance fund.

Since its creation in 1934, the programs of the Federal Housing Administration have from time to time been expanded and broadened in order that it could be of increasing assistance in providing housing to meet the needs of all Americans. These goals have not yet been fully achieved and additional programs will undoubtedly be proposed and enacted into law in the future.

As new insurance programs have been authorized, new insurance funds or accounts have usually been created, thus requiring separate financing and accounting for the programs. These funds and accounts have grown from 2 in 1934 to 15 at the present time.

In the early 1950's it became apparent that, by reason of the small volume of insurance written under some of the special purpose programs, revenues would be insufficient to maintain those programs on a self-supporting basis. Because of this, and in order to strengthen FHA's overall position and avoid the necessity of calling upon the Congress for operating funds, section 219 was added to the National Housing Act. That authorized the Commissioner to transfer moneys from any one or more insurance funds or accounts to any other fund or account, except the participating reserve account and the general surplus account of the mutual mortgage insurance fund.

The effect of section 219 was to give FHA all of the advantages and flexibility of single-fund accounting but it left the agency burdened with the expense and necessity under the act for full and complete accounting for each of its present 15 funds or accounts.

While the maintenance of separate insurance funds affords complete financial information with respect to each of FHA's various insurance programs, such complete accounting and fiscal data on a continuing monthly basis are unnecessary for management purposes. Moreover, the maintenance of the separate funds complicates FHA's financial structure.

Under the proposed consolidation of funds, statements would be provided monthly for the general insurance fund and the mutual mortgage insurance fund with respect to the status of the funds. Data would also continue to be supplied which is needed to evaluate the effectiveness of individual programs.

The proposed consolidation would reduce from 15 to 2 the number of monthly entries to be accounted for and later consolidated into a combined balance sheet and statement of income and expense. It would substantially reduce field reporting of expenses. The consolidation would also result in significant savings in the Treasury Department since the recordkeeping, issuance, exchange, and redemption of debentures would relate to only 2 series of debentures rather than 22 series as at present.

After consolidation, FHA would still be able to compute with reasonable accuracy the financial experience of individual programs, as the need might arise. Special attention would continue to be given to income and loss experience under the section 213 cooperative housing program in compliance with the desire expressed in the conference report on the Housing Act of 1964. The semi-annual and annual valuation of reserve requirements would continue to be prepared as in the past.

Section 209. Optional cash payment of insurance benefits: This section would authorize the Federal Housing Commissioner, in his discretion at the time of payment, to offer payment of insurance benefits in cash on any insurance claim filed by a mortgagee on or after the date of its enactment. At present, the FHA does not have this general authority, but periodically calls in debentures for redemption to the extent deemed appropriate. The proposed new authority in no way changes the basic nature of the FHA debenture system, as the Commissioner would be given no new authority to agree in advance to make payments in cash instead of debentures.

A cash payment under this new authority would be in an amount equivalent to the face amount of the debentures that would have been issued, plus an amount equivalent to the interest which the debentures would have earned, computed to a date established by the Commissioner. In a case where a mortgagee, under his mortgage insurance contract, is entitled to receive debentures, the mortgagee would still be entitled to receive payment in debentures rather than in cash if the mortgagee does not want to accept a cash payment. Mortgagees filing insurance claims on mortgages insured under the section 220, 221, or 233 programs (urban renewal housing, low- or moderate-income housing, and experimental housing) after the Housing Act of 1961 now have in their insurance contracts the right to a cash insurance settlement. Also, lenders insuring home improvement loans under section 203(k) after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964 have the right to receive cash insurance benefits.

For various reasons, occasions may arise when it would be in the national interest to pay insurance benefits in cash rather than in debentures. For example, the sale of debentures in the private capital markets may result in losses to their holders where there is a spread in interest rates. Where adverse conditions exist in the private capital market, it would be desirable for the Commissioner to have the authority to make cash payments of insurance benefits in all programs.

In order to have funds with which to make such cash payments, the Commissioner would need the authority to borrow from the U.S. Treasury such amounts as he determines from time to time. The Treasury loans would bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary, taking into consideration the average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities during the month preceding the issuance of the obligations evidencing the loans. Of course, this borrowing authority would be in place of the U.S. guarantee on the debentures which would otherwise be issued.

TITLE III—URBAN RENEWAL

Section 301. General neighborhood renewal plans: This section would make more realistic the statutory requirements with respect to general neighborhood renewal plans.

It would permit a GNRP to be prepared for an urban renewal area or areas together with any adjoining area or areas having specially related problems and eliminate the present requirement that the whole area covered by the GNRP be an urban renewal area.

However, this section would not make eligible for urban renewal project activities any areas not presently eligible, and would not provide any increased grant assistance, through noncash credits or otherwise, to urban renewal projects carried out in those portions of the area covered by the GNRP in which urban renewal project activities can be undertaken.

To permit unified planning of total neighborhoods, this section would authorize a GNRP area to include subareas which are not in themselves so blighted or deteriorated as to require urban renewal treatment. Under present legislative language, all parts of a GNRP area must be slum or blighted, deteriorated, or deteriorating, to the same extent as is required before an urban renewal project can be undertaken in the area. The amendment would make possible, for example, study of the street capacities and requirements of an entire neighborhood rather than only those portions of that neighborhood already scheduled to receive urban renewal assistance through an urban renewal project or projects.

This section would also ease the present requirement that all urban renewal projects in the urban renewal area covered by the GNRP be completed in 10 years and would require only that all such projects be initiated in that time. The present law describing a GNRP states that, "urban renewal activities therein may have to be carried out in stages * * * over an estimated period of not more than 10 years." Experience with urban renewal activity in GNRP areas has proven this requirement to be unrealistic.

Section 302. Increase in authorization for capital grants: This section would increase the aggregate amount of obligational authority for urban renewal grants by $2.9 billion. Of the new $2.9 billion authority, $675 million would be authorized upon the enactment of the bill, with further increases of $725 million on July 1, 1966, and $750 million on July 1 in each of the years 1967 and 1968.

The existing figure designating total present urban renewal grant authorization ($4,725,000,000) would be reduced by $25 million to reflect the deletion of an obsolete proviso in that amount. This is the proviso which authorized the use of a portion of the urban renewal grant authorization for demonstration grants under the urban mass transportation program.

The new authority would permit, over a period of 4 years, an increasing level of urban renewal activity. It is geared to available local resources for the financing and carrying out of projects during this period, and takes into consideration other legislative provisions in the bill. The volume of need and demand for this program are well recognized, and extend to almost all cities in all areas of the United States.

Section 303. Community renewal program requirement: This section would establish a new community renewal program requirement for communities of over 50,000 population which seek Federal assistance for urban renewal projects. The new requirement would apply to projects for which planning is commenced (and provided "Federal recognition") later than 6 months after the date of enactment of the bill. When a community later applies for approval of the urban renewal plan and for loan or grant assistance in its execution, the community would be required to demonstrate that the proposed project is in accord with an up-to-date "community renewal program" which it has prepared as the basis of a community-wide attack on urban renewal problems, making use of all available Federal and local resources. This requirement would be modified, during the first 3 years after enactment of this bill, in order to provide sufficient time for cities to prepare such programs. During that time the community could instead demonstrate that it is actively preparing such a program and that the proposed project can reasonably be expected to be in accord with it upon its completion.

There would also be a complete exemption from the requirement in the case of projects undertaken in disaster areas, in accord with the special urban renewal law provisions for such projects. To be of full assistance, such projects must go into execution as soon as possible, and they are therefore exempted from other regular statutory requirements.

An acceptable community renewal program would not be required to have been prepared with Federal assistance. However, such assistance, in the form of two-thirds grants, is already available under provisions which were added to the urban renewal law by the Housing Act of 1959. The basic purpose of such programs is to assess in broad terms the community's overall needs for urban renewal and to develop a staged program of action, commensurate with its resources, to meet these needs, determining, to the extent feasible, individual urban renewal areas and activities and appropriate schedules and priorities for undertaking such projects.

Activity in this field has been steadily increasing since about 1961. Sixty-nine localities of over 50,000 population are now preparing such programs with Federal grant assistance, and seven others have completed initial preparation. Already, about one-third of all cities of this size which are undertaking urban renewal projects are also undertaking community renewal programs. Sufficient experience has now been gained with these programs, and their value, so that it is both feasible and desirable to require, rather than permit, larger communities to undertake such programs as a basis for individual urban renewal project planning.

Experience to date has shown that a community renewal program can be valuable to a locality in bringing to its attention problems and opportunities in scheduling and coordinating urban renewal projects. It can, for example, determine the effect on a proposed project of housing resources and relocation needs in other proposed projects and public undertakings. It can also focus on the social and economic needs of the residents of slum and deteriorated areas and the resources available to meet those needs—which are of direct importance in planning urban renewal activities in those areas. Whether and to what extent an area can be rehabilitated depends, for example, not only on the type and condition of its buildings but also on the age and family size of its residents, their incomes, and their willingness and ability to participate in the upgrading and maintaining of the area. Community renewal programs can help to make available information on such questions and help to assure that necessary social services and facilities are provided.

The community action programs authorized in the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 and the new rehabilitation and code enforcement provisions of the Housing Act of 1964 have already provided important new opportunities for increased effectiveness in urban renewal. This bill would provide additional opportunities through its new grant programs for rehabilitation, for neighborhood facilities, and for the provision and beautification of open space and other public land. One of the primary purposes of the proposed community renewal program requirement is to assure that urban renewal projects are planned and scheduled to obtain maximum benefit from the facilities and activities assisted under such programs. With their help many localities should find it possible to give increased emphasis to rehabilitation, compared to clearance activities, and to gray-area and other residential renewal, compared to commercial and industrial renewal.

Section 304. Amendment of section 316 of Housing Act of 1954: This section would clarify the authority of the Redevelopment Land Agency of the District of Columbia to undertake urban renewal projects in areas which are not residential or predominantly residential at the outset by amending section 316(2) of the Housing Act of 1954 (which inserted a new section 20 in the District of Columbia Redevelopment Act of 1945) to provide unmistakable authority for the Redevelopment Land Agency to undertake non-residential projects as contemplated by title I of the Housing Act of 1949.

TITLE IV—LOW RENT PUBLIC HOUSING

Section 401. Acceptance of local certification of equivalent elimination: This section would permit acceptance of certifications by local governing bodies that they have complied with the equivalent elimination requirements of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937.

This amendment is essentially technical in character. It is designed to eliminate unnecessary administrative processing and attendant expenses, and is in line with administration and congressional policy to eliminate unnecessary administrative costs and vest greater local responsibility in local governmental agencies.

Under the act, where a low-rent housing project is undertaken in a locality, the local governing body must enter into an agreement providing for the elimination, within 5 years, of a number of substandard dwelling units equivalent to the new low-rent housing units included in the project. Extensions of the 5-year period for elimination can be granted where there is an acute shortage of decent low-income housing in the community. Administration of this provision now involves direct Federal supervision over the carrying out of the equivalent elimination agreement, even though the act provides no specific penalties for noncompliance. Such supervision would be eliminated by this section.

Section 402. Greater use of existing private housing: This section would perfect the annual contributions formula to permit local housing authorities to make greater use of the private housing supply through the purchase, purchase and rehabilitation, or lease of privately owned units, which are available on the local market and suitable for low-rent housing purposes.

The present annual contributions formula establishes a maximum contribution in terms of a specified percentage (the "going Federal rate" plus 2 percent) of the acquisition or development cost of a project. Under this formula, use can only be made of housing with an economic life extending over a sufficient period to allow the amortization of the capital cost at the statutory rate. This rate was designed to permit amortization of bonded indebtedness over a long period, and the established practice has been to contract for periods of 40 years. Such a period is too long to permit utilization of many kinds of existing housing that may be suitable for low-rent housing, or to permit the leasing of units desirable for relatively short-term use.

This section would authorize an alternative formula under which the annual contribution for an acquired or leased unit could be fixed, as a maximum, at the same dollar amount as would be established as the annual contribution under the conventional formula for a new low-rent housing project consisting of units designed for the comparable number, types and sizes of families. Because it is not stated in terms of a specific percentage of capital cost, the formula would permit the acquisition, or acquisition and rehabilitation, of structures, over whatever period may be appropriate considering the condition and nature of the property, as well as the leasing of units for short-term use in meeting particular needs.

The new formula is intended to promote economies in the use of such housing through its requirement that the annual Federal contribution could never exceed the fixed contribution that would be established for comparable housing in a new project. Where a project or dwelling is acquired for use over a substantially shorter period than is required for units in the regular program, this would mean that the capital cost would have to be reduced according to the reduction in amortization period, since the maximum contribution available annually to amortize that cost could be no greater than in the case of a comparable conventional newly constructed project, but this annual amount would be available for substantially fewer years than in the case of the newly constructed project. The same limitation on the dollar amount of the annual contribution would apply to leased units, and would operate to preclude the excessive rentals that might otherwise result from efforts to secure housing for lease in a housing market where vacancies are low.

There has been a growing awareness in recent years that the subsidized low-rent housing program has suffered because it has not utilized the existing housing supply. Under this new authorization the PHA would be enabled to finance the leasing for any term of privately owned units in individual houses and in multifamily structures. It would be able to finance joint private-public owned or leased units. It would be able to subsidize units financed through other means such as FHA-insured, conventional financing, or State or municipal financing.

An important source of existing housing is the supply of FHA- and VA-acquired properties. Despite high vacancy rates, there are many low-income families in communities where vacancies exist who continue to live in slum conditions because they are unable to pay the economic rent which the vacant properties warrant.

In many cases local authorities should be able to provide units more quickly under this section, than through new construction and meet more readily the special problems presented by large numbers of low-income displaced. The new formula should also provide greater flexibility in providing housing for different kinds of families, as in obtaining units for larger families and providing conveniently located units for elderly families. A collateral advantage of broadened use of existing structures is its effect in encouraging the conservation and improvement of residential properties.

Projects involving the purchase of existing housing would, of course, be subject to the same requirements of approval and cooperation by the local governing body as in the case of new construction. As in the case of the regular program, there will be local selection of the properties and sites to be used.

Since the units which are leased will be privately owned and subject to tax, the required local contribution, normally provided through tax exemption, would have to be provided by other means. The required local contribution, when property is not tax exempt, is the amount by which the taxes paid exceed 10 percent of the shelter rents charged in the project or dwelling. Local communities can easily meet this requirement by authorizing the housing authority to retain from payments-in-lieu-of-taxes to be paid with respect to its tax-exempt properties the amount required to meet this local contribution with respect to the privately owned units.

Use of existing housing will constitute a valuable supplement—but nevertheless merely a supplement—to new construction. Existing housing can be effectively used for low-income families only where a combination of certain conditions exist. There must, first, be a supply of vacant housing on the local market, and that housing must freely be made available, since eminent domain will of course not be used under the new program. Moreover, the vacant housing should be appropriately located to serve the needs of the low-income families to be housed. Its cost, design, and physical condition must be appropriate, and its use should be consistent with the community plans and urban renewal programs and in accord with the wishes of the local governing body.

Section 403—Increase in authorization for annual contributions: This section would increase the limit on the aggregate amount of annual contributions contracts for low-rent housing, so as to permit continuation of the regular program for conventional units at approximately its past average and current level, plus provision of additional units through new approaches involving purchase and leasing of existing housing, with or without rehabilitation. Contracts for approximately 240,000 units over the next 4 years would be authorized.

For conventional units, the increase contemplates a program level of 35,000 units a year. For new approaches (purchase, leasing, and rehabilitation) the increase would provide for an additional 100,000 units over the 4-year period. The law would not, however, prescribe specific levels for the different approaches.

Program levels, each of the 4 years, are estimated as follows:

	Regular program	Purchase	Leasing
1966.....	35,000	10,000	5,000
1967.....	35,000	15,000	10,000
1968.....	35,000	15,000	10,000
1969.....	35,000	20,000	15,000

To permit this level of program activity, the amendment would increase the limit on the aggregate amount of annual contributions by $47 million on the date of enactment of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, and by the same amount on July 1 in each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968, or an aggregate increase of $188 million.

Experience with the interim additional authorization which was provided in the Housing Act of 1964 has already shown that the need and the demand are great and continuing. The additional authorization in the 1964 act contemplated the provision of 37,500 units of low-rent public housing. Affecting this authorization were the applications on hand when it became available, plus subsequent applications. Applications for about 74,000 units had been received by the end of January 1965, and more than 40,000 units had been placed under program reservation. Taking into account attrition and delays, and in order to place the 37,500 units under annual contributions contracts by September 30, 1965, the PHA plans to place a total of about 50,000 units under program reservation. In view of the application for some 24,000 units above this amount, the PHA has already instituted priorities and limitations. It assumes that the 24,000 units, plus any additional units remaining from the 50,000 and included in applications received after January, will have to depend upon further congressional authorization.

The provisions of the bill which would provide more flexibility in connection with the acquisition, leasing, and rehabilitation of existing housing, and the provisions extending to the handicapped parity of treatment with the elderly, would afford new means for meeting the needs.

Without any additional authorization for annual contributions, the public housing program can also be a valuable vehicle for helping families make an easier adjustment to urban living conditions. In many cases, low-income families are not even aware of the services which are available, and such services have often been inadequate. To help develop a better range of services to meet the social needs of families in public housing, and coordinate those existing services, local housing authorities will be authorized to provide broader assistance within the framework of the public housing program. Such a program could provide special counseling in the maintenance of housing, as well as counseling to families prior to moving into or out of public housing. These are primarily the kinds of services that an enlightened manager would want to engage in for the more economical management of the housing.

At the Federal level PHA will work to the fullest extent possible with other interested agencies, such as the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Office of Economic Opportunity. At the local level local housing authorities would cooperate, as appropriate, with other local public agencies and private nonprofit community service organizations. Expenditures from project revenue would be authorized only for specific planned programs which would be periodically reviewed. In approving programs, preference will be given to those in which a substantial portion of the costs are met by funds from sources other than those supplied by the PHA-aided program or by funds derived from demonstrable economies achieved by local housing authorities in their operation.

Section 404. Sale of federally owned projects to private purchasers: This section would remove the restriction that federally owned public housing projects may be sold only to public housing agencies. It would permit disposal to a nonprofit organization, but any sale would have to be for continued use as low-rent housing. There are two remaining federally owned public housing projects, both of which are located in Oklahoma. Disposal of these projects has been blocked by the restriction permitting sale only to a public housing agency, since Oklahoma law does not authorize creation of local public housing authorities. Removal of the restriction would permit consideration to be given to disposal to a purchaser, such as a nonprofit organization. The projects would continue to be subject to the requirement that they be used only for low-income families.

TITLE V—COLLEGE HOUSING

Section 501. Increase in authorization for college housing loans: This section would increase the college housing loan authorization by $110 million upon the enactment of the bill, with further increases of $285 million on July 1 in each of the years 1966 and 1967, and $275 million on July 1, 1968. This section would also increase on July 1 in each of the years 1965 through 1968: (1) By $30 million the ceiling on loans for other educational facilities (such as dining halls, health facilities, and student unions) and (2) by $15 million the ceiling on loans to hospitals for nurses and intern housing.

The Treasury borrowing authorization for the college housing loan program now totals $2,875 million with ceilings of $295 million for college service facilities and $220 million for hospitals. Through the end of December 1964, a total of 2,328 loans for $2,502 million have been approved under this program. As of this date, there were 172 applications for $267 million for which funds had been reserved, bringing the total funds committed to $2,769 million.

Through December 1964, funds committed under the program provide assistance for about 2,360 projects, including housing accommodations for about 593,000 students and faculty (including student nurses and interns) and also 239 projects for related facilities such as student unions, dining halls, and health centers. There have been no defaults under the program in payment of principal and interest.

The Office of Education's college and university enrollment and facilities survey indicates an increase in college enrollments from 5.2 million in 1965 to 6.7 million in 1969. Assuming that about 25 percent of this increased enrollment will require college housing accommodations costing about $5,000 per student, it is estimated that total college housing needs during the next 4 years will amount to about $2 billion, exclusive of related facilities (cafeterias, dining halls, student unions, infirmaries, and other essential service facilities), and exclusive of the current backlog of unmet housing needs.

The increased authorization in this section, with amounts from repayment of loans, would give institutions of higher learning assurance that the present program would continue during the next 4 years to supplement funds available in the private market. This would permit the institutions to plan their residential and related construction programs to meet the expected tidal wave of students. The increased authorization would permit increased program levels in fiscal 1967, 1968, and 1969.

TITLE VI—GRANTS FOR BASIC PUBLIC WORKS, NEIGHBORHOOD FACILITIES, AND THE ADVANCE ACQUISITION OF LAND

Section 601. Purpose: The rapid rise in population that has occurred in the Nation has outpaced the ability of many localities to provide necessary basic community facilities and neighborhood health and recreation facilities. There is a tremendous need for additional basic water supply and sewage disposal facilities to provide for future population growth. Between 1960 and 1975 the urban population alone is expected to rise from 125 to 171 million and the per capita use of municipal water systems is expected to increase from 140 to 160 gallons per day. As a result, municipal water consumption (excluding large industrial users) is expected to increase from 17.5 to 27.4 billion gallons per day, a rise of 57 percent in just 15 years.

Relatively limited local resources are available for neighborhood facilities such as community centers, health stations, or other public buildings that house health and recreational facilities. Nonetheless, such facilities are essential to our communities so that they can effectively cope with such problems as the debilitating effects of idleness upon their juvenile and elderly population. Substantial Federal financial assistance will be required to enable local governments to provide adequate neighborhood facilities geared to such needs of the young and the elderly.

Great economies and other benefits can be gained by the advance acquisition of land planned to be utilized in connection with the future construction of public works and facilities. Such advance acquisition makes possible large monetary savings; savings which have ranged from $5 to $30 for every dollar invested in the advance acquisition of future highway rights-of-way.

The purpose of this title is to assist and encourage the communities of the Nation to meet the needs of their citizens by making it possible with Federal grant assistance for their governmental bodies (1) to construct adequate basic water and sewer facilities needed to promote the efficient orderly growth and development of our communities, (2) to construct neighborhood facilities needed to enable them to carry on programs of necessary social services, and (3) to acquire, in a planned and orderly fashion, land to be utilized in connection with the future construction of public works and facilities.

Section 602. Grants for basic water and sewer facilities: This section would authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to finance a portion of the cost of certain projects for basic water and sewer facilities. The amount of any grant made under this section could not exceed 40 percent of the cost of that portion of the project which is necessary to enable the project to adequately serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area to be served by the project.

No grant could be made for any project unless the Administrator determines that the project will serve an area which is expected to experience significant population growth in the reasonably foreseeable future and that the project is (1) designed so that adequate capacity will be available to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area, (2) consistent with the program for a unified or officially coordinated areawide water or sewer facilities system as part of the comprehensively planned development of the area, and (3) necessary to orderly community development. Prior to July 1, 1968, grants, in the discretion of the Administrator, could be made if a program for an areawide water and sewer facility system is under active preparation but not yet completed, if the facility for which assistance is sought can reasonably be expected to be required as part of such program, and there is an urgent need for the facility.

The areawide system for basic water and sewer facilities would be required to be a part of the comprehensively planned development of the area. The requirement that a basic water and sewer facility assisted under this section be part of a unified or officially coordinated areawide water or sewer facility system will assure that Federal grant funds do not finance uncoordinated or fractionated water or sewer facilities. Where there are no existing areawide water or sewer systems the Administrator would require as a condition to a grant for a single, independent water or sewer project, that the project be designed so that it can be linked with other independent water or sewer facilities or a proposed areawide system.

In addition, requiring that the areawide water or sewer facility be related to the comprehensive planned development of the area will assure that grant funds available under this section will be available only for facilities which help promote orderly community development and are consistent with a coordinated scheduling of other public works in the area. Such orderly development and coordination will minimize waste and unnecessary costs which are the result of the unplanned and haphazard construction of basic community facilities.

The requirement that a facility assisted with funds under this section have adequate capacity to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area will avoid the duplication of costs often occasioned by having to rebuild undersized facilities at a later date.

The Federal grants for basic water and sewer facilities authorized by this section will stimulate an acceleration in the rate of construction of water supply and sewerage disposal facilities needed for growth and will contribute to the development of areawide systems which are consistent with comprehensive local planning.

Proper regard will be given to established standards to assure that facilities constructed with assistance under this section are adequate for the maintenance of health and control of water pollution.

Section 603. Grants for neighborhood facilities: This section would authorize the Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to finance specific projects for neighborhood facilities, including neighborhood or community centers, youth centers, health stations, and other public buildings to provide health or recreational or similar social services. The grants generally would be limited to 66⅔ percent of the development cost of the project, but could be up to 75 percent of such cost in the case of a project located in an area designated as a redevelopment area under section 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act.

Before making a grant under this section, the Administrator would be required to determine that the project would provide a neighborhood facility which is necessary for carrying out a program of health, recreational, or similar social services in the community. The project must be consistent with comprehensive planning for the development of the community. These Federal grants would thus help to stimulate a concerted effort by local public bodies, possibly in cooperation with private groups, to provide systematically for the often long-neglected local health, recreational, and social service needs of the community.

Since most of these needs are largely those of low- and moderate-income families and individuals, the neighborhood facility projects would have to be so located as to be available for use by a significant portion (or number in the case of large urban places) of the area's low- or moderate-income residents. In addition, a priority would be given to applications for projects that will primarily benefit members of low-income families or otherwise further the objectives of a community action program approved under title II of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

No neighborhood facility aided by a Federal grant may be converted for a period of 20 years to other uses without the approval of the Administrator. In approving any conversion the Administrator may impose additional conditions and requirements.

It has been increasingly recognized that much of the heavy costs of ill health, dependency, juvenile delinquency, and old age could be avoided by preventive measures such as adequate local preventive health, recreational, and related social services. The cost of these services are small when compared to the tremendous economic and social losses resulting from illness and deprivation and the mounting expenditures in curing sickness, making welfare payments, combating crime, and accommodating the needs of the elderly. Availability of Federal grants for neighborhood facilities (many of which can be multipurpose facilities which can serve the needs of different groups) will encourage communities to expand, and in some instances initiate, a group of community services which hitherto have been neglected.

To obtain a Federal grant a local government would have to furnish from its own resources the remaining funds needed to complete the project. In addition, it would have to allot sufficient funds to operate the facilities after they are built.

Section 604. Advance acquisition of land: This section would authorize the Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to assist in financing the acquisition of sites planned to be utilized in connection with the future construction of public works or facilities. The grant could not exceed the aggregate amount of reasonable interest charges on a loan or other financial obligation incurred to finance the acquisition of such land for a period not exceeding the lesser of 5 years from the date of issue of such loan or financial obligation or the time elapsing between the date of issue and the date on which construction of the public work or facility is begun.

Before making such grants the Administrator would be required to determine that the public work or facility for which the land is to be utilized is planned to be constructed or initiated within a reasonable period of time. He also would have to determine that construction of such public work or facility will contribute to economy, efficiency, and the comprehensively planned development of the area.

On some occasions, circumstances arising after the acquisition of land purchased with assistance under this section may make construction of the facility planned to be placed on such land no longer feasible or desirable. A community which has acquired land with assistance under this section may then wish to divert the land to other uses. In such circumstances the Administrator is authorized to require the repayment of assistance provided under this section and prescribe the terms and conditions of such repayment.

To qualify for Federal financial assistance, a community would have to be engaged in comprehensive planning appropriate to its size and location. Larger urban areas and communities experiencing rapid growth would have to be engaged in comprehensive planning for the development of the entire urban area. The public work or facility for which the advance acquisition of land is to be made would have to be consistent with a community-wide and areawide system of such facilities.

In smaller isolated communities it will not be necessary that the entire planning process be underway. For such places, it would be enough to have a clear indication that the community had examined its probable future size, public facility needs, and financial capacity and that the proposed facility would be an efficient element in its efforts to meet its future needs. In addition, to the extent that there is an overall plan for the development of the community, the public work or facility for which advance acquisition of land is to be made will have to be consistent with the existing overall plan.

The objective of this Federal assistance is to encourage communities to plan ahead, in connection with their future public works needs, with respect to land acquisition as well as preparation of construction plans. Under section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954, the Housing Administrator is authorized to make interest-free advances to finance the planning of specific works. But the advance acquisition of sites is equally important in helping to attain maximum economy and efficiency in the construction of public works. Such advance site acquisition would be assisted by the new program.

By encouraging communities to anticipate the site requirements for future public works construction and by assisting them in the timely acquisition of the land that will be used in such future construction, the new program will help produce a number of savings. Local public bodies will be assured of the availability of appropriate sites and will save by acquiring sites before the rising trend of land prices increases their cost. Advance acquisition before there is further construction on a site would avoid the costs of demolishing such construction, relocating the occupants of the buildings and disrupting businesses. Advance knowledge regarding the site location of future public works would enable private land developers and builders to make appropriate adjustments in their construction plans or schedules, which would lead to more orderly growth in the area.

Section 605. General provisions: Subsection (a) of this section would apply certain administrative provisions found in section 402 of the Housing Act of 1950 to activities carried on under the provisions of this title.

Subsection (b) authorizes the Administrator to make advance or progress payments on account of any grant made under this title and provides that no part of any such grant could be used for payment of ordinary governmental or operating expenses.

Section 606. Definitions: This section would, for the purposes of this title, define: (a) "State" to include the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the territories and possessions of the United States; (b) "Local public bodies and agencies" to include public corporate bodies or political subdivisions; public agencies or instrumentalities of one or more States, municipalities, or political subdivisions of one or more States (including public agencies and instrumentalities of one or more municipalities, or other political subdivisions of one or more States); Indian tribes; and boards or commissions established under the laws of any State to finance specific capital improvement projects; and (c) "Development cost" to mean costs of the construction of the facility and the land on which it is located, including necessary site improvements to permit its use as a site for the facility.

Section 607. Labor standards: This section provides that prevailing wages determined in accordance with the provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act are to be applicable to construction work financed with assistance under sections 602 and 603 of this title, and specifies that certain authority generally available to the Secretary of Labor with respect to the enforcement of such labor standards shall also apply to these requirements of this title.

Section 608. Appropriations: This section would authorize to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, and would provide that all funds so appropriated would remain available until expended. Funds could, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

For fiscal year 1966, it is currently estimated that appropriations will be requested in the amount of $100 million for the purpose of making grants for basic water and sewer facilities as authorized by section 602, $50 million for the purposes of making grants for neighborhood facilities as authorized by section 603, and $25 million for the purposes of making grants to help finance the advance acquisition of land as authorized by section 604.

TITLE VII—SECONDARY MARKET AND SPECIAL ASSISTANCE FUNCTIONS

Section 701. Increase in FNMA special assistance authority: This section would increase by approximately $2,345,000,000 the amount of special assistance that the President of the United States can authorize the Federal National Mortgage Association to provide for housing and community development.

Under its special assistance program, the FNMA makes commitments to purchase and purchases FHA- and VA-backed mortgages financing housing for low- and moderate-income families, in urban renewal areas, for the elderly, and for disaster victims, and other special types of housing designated by the President as being housing that needs special assistance. Under other provisions in the bill, special assistance to FHA-insured mortgages financing certain land development would also be authorized.

The increase in special assistance authority would be provided by subsection (a) raising the present $1.7 billion authorization in section 305(c) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act by $150 million on the date of enactment of the bill, and by an additional $550 million on July 1, 1966, $700 million on July 1, 1967, and by $725 million on July 1, 1968.

Subsection (b) would provide approximately $220 million more authority, to be merged with the authority in section 305(c) of the Charter Act, by transferring to that section the balance of the amount of special assistance authorized by section 305(f) for housing for the military, AEC and NASA financed with FHA title VIII insured mortgages. Approximately $220 million (out of the $500 million originally authorized for title VIII housing) is unused and would be made available to the President for special assistance as he may authorize.

Section 702. FNMA purchase of mortgages held by Federal instrumentalities: This section would authorize FNMA to purchase from other Federal agencies housing mortgages they have insured or guaranteed and offered to FNMA for purchase, or housing mortgages securing loans made by the Federal agencies. A provision now in the Charter Act would be deleted which generally prohibits FNMA from purchasing any mortgage offered by or covering property held by a Federal instrumentality.

This section would permit steps to centralize the Government's ownership and management of housing mortgages to the extent determined desirable from time to time. To this extent, such centralization could promote economy in the maintenance of mortgage servicing facilities by Government agencies. In addition, FNMA through its marketing facilities (including the new pooling and trust certificate program authorized by the Housing Act of 1964) could sell the mortgages or participations therein to private investors and thus substitute private financing for Treasury financing where the present owning agencies cannot make such sales.

TITLE VIII—OPEN-SPACE LAND AND URBAN BEAUTIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT

Section 801. Revision of title heading and findings and purpose: This section would add reference to "Urban Beautification and Improvement" to "Open-Space Land" in the heading of title VII of the Housing Act of 1961, to take into account the proposed new program (described below) of grants for urban beautification and improvement. It would also amend the congressional findings and statement of purpose of the title to refer to the need both for this proposed program and for the proposed new program (also described below) to provide open-space land in built-up urban areas.

Section 802. Increased grant level for preservation of open-space land: This section would change the grant levels of the present open-space program from 20 and 30 percent to 30 and 40 percent, respectively. This program has, in the about 3½ years since its enactment in the Housing Act of 1961, increasingly demonstrated its potential for meeting the critical need for additional open-space acquisition in urban areas. The relatively low grant level has, however, substantially impeded use of the program, and this is particularly harmful in many localities where prompt local action is essential in order both to help control urban development and to conserve public funds in the face of sharply rising land costs.

It is important, also, to increase the grant percentages at this time so that the Federal assistance made available for parks and other open space in urban areas through this program may be on a par with that made available through the new recreation area programs authorized in the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965. That act authorizes up to 50-percent grants for acquisition and development of outdoor recreation areas but such grants will, by administrative action, be limited to 40 percent, the same as the proposed higher grants under this program.

Section 803. Substitution of appropriation authority, without dollar limitation for grant contract authority: This section would remove the present $75 million contract authority for grants under title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 and substitute authority for appropriation of such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the title, without dollar limit. This authorization would apply to the present program of grants for urban open-space preservation, as well as to the two proposed new grant programs for provision of open space in built-up urban areas and for beautification and improvement of urban public land. It would also apply to the present authorization for the Administrator to provide technical assistance, undertake studies, and publish information in connection with activities carried on under the title.

Fifty million dollars was originally authorized for the present open-space preservation program, by the Housing Act of 1961, and this amount was increased to $75 million in the Housing Act of 1964. Although this authorization has been in the form of contract authority, funding for the program has, since its inception, been in the form of advance appropriations for liquidation of this authority, with a restriction on use of any contract authority in excess of such appropriations, through earmarking of funds appropriated for administrative expenditures. This method of funding is in effect equivalent to that provided under a regular authorization for appropriations, and if the Congress intends that the program continue to be so funded, it would be desirable to amend the statute as proposed in order more clearly to express the congressional intent.

The President's budget for fiscal year 1966 proposes a level of $60 million to carry out activities under the open-space title. This would in any case require additional appropriation authority of $31.3 million, since all but $28.7 million of the presently authorized $75 million has been appropriated and is expected to be committed by June 30, 1965.

Section 804—Grants for provision of open-space land in built-up urban areas: This section would add a new program to title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 to provide Federal grants to States and local public bodies to assist them in providing open-space land through the acquisition of title to, or other permanent interests in, developed land in built-up portions of urban areas. A grant could not exceed 40 percent of the cost of acquiring the interest in the land and the cost of demolishing and removing those improvements on the land which were inappropriate to its use as permanent open-space land. These grants could only be made where the governing body of the locality determines that adequate open-space land cannot effectively be provided through use of existing undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped land and the Administrator determines that the proposed acquisition will assist in the comprehensively planned development of the locality.

The present title VII program is limited to assisting in the acquisition of lands that are undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped. This limitation has helped to prevent acquisitions in the more densely developed, "built-up" portions of urban areas. The proposed new program would help to correct this situation and would provide additional assistance for such acquisitions, in the form of 40-percent grants, in recognition of the higher cost of acquiring and clearing developed land.

This program could assist, for example, in the acquisition of land for pedestrian malls, waterfront restoration, or neighborhood "commons" and play areas. More such areas are needed to enhance the physical environment of our urban communities and to make them more attractive places in which to live, work, and play.

Federally financed relocation payments would be authorized in connection with projects assisted under the program. This would provide for any displaced individuals, families, business concerns, and nonprofit organizations the same benefits already provided in connection with the urban renewal and public housing programs.

It is contemplated that acquisitions would be of relatively small size, and in key locations which would assist in the comprehensively planned development of the locality.

As with the present program, land acquired under this program would have to be permanently retained as open space, and it would have to be demonstrated that the locality is making maximum efforts to acquire and preserve open-space land through other means, such as the acquisition and conversion of tax delinquent lands.

Since the usefulness of such open areas would depend in large part on how they are developed, the proposed program (described below) of grants for urban beautification and improvement would be especially useful in assuring the success of this program.

Section 805. Grants for urban beautification and improvement: Subsection (a) of this section would add a new program to title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 authorizing matching grants to assist States and local public bodies in carrying out local programs for the greater use and enjoyment of open space and other public land in urban areas. The need for such assistance was recently emphasized by the President in his message on the state of the Union, where he pointed out that "Within our cities imaginative programs are needed to landscape streets and transform open areas into places of beauty and recreation."

The proposed local programs would, under criteria established by the Administrator, be required to (1) represent significant and effective efforts, involving all available public and private resources, for the beautification and improvement of public land in the locality and (2) be important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality. Assistance could be provided for eligible work on land acquired pursuant to the acquisition programs of title VII or on other public land such as streets, but the work could only be for the beautification of the land or its improvement for recreation or other open-space uses. Assisted activities could, for example, include tree planting and other landscaping on streets, park improvements and renovation, and other substantial upgrading of selected outdoor public areas. Generally, no assistance would be provided for buildings. Only those small structures would be eligible which are incidental to proposed park or other open-space uses. Thus, toilet facilities or rain shelters might be assisted, but an activities center, museum building, swimming pool, or recreation equipment could not be.

Assisted activities would have to be capable of providing long-term benefit to the locality. Assistance would not, for example, be provided for the increasing operating costs of keeping parks better lighted or more tidy. On the other hand, assistance could be provided for the cost of the lighting fixtures. Thus, it is anticipated that many of the assisted activities would be "routine" improvements, but which the proposed Federal assistance would enable the localities to undertake on a broader scale.

An important aim of the legislation would also be to encourage and assist local experimentation and innovation. To facilitate this, the administrator would be authorized to make up to $5 million of grants, without the otherwise required matching local grants, for projects which he determines to have special value in developing and demonstrating new and improved methods and materials for use in beautification and improvement activities. Under this provision localities could, for example, receive special assistance in providing outdoor facilities for art and technological exhibits or in holding a design contest for a downtown pedestrian mall.

Because of the special nature of these demonstration projects, they would not be subject to the "local program" and other usual grant requirements provided in this section. However, it is expected that grants under this provision would ordinarily be for less than 100 percent of cost, since allowance would be made for the continued benefit which the project might provide the locality.

The experience gained in these special demonstration projects could, in turn, be made available to other localities through the authority of the administrator to undertake studies and publish information to carry out the purposes of the title.

A Federal grant could not exceed 40 percent of the amount by which the cost of the activities carried on by the applicant, during its fiscal year, under a local program has exceeded its usual expenditures for comparable activities during that year. The usual expenditures of the applicant for such activities would be determined in accord with administrative regulations based on the previous expenditures of the locality but taking into account, to the extent feasible, unusual circumstances affecting those expenditures.

Approval would be given in advance for the types of activities to be carried out and the overall amounts which could be spent, but a portion of each grant would be withheld until the required accounting at the end of year. This procedure would help to assure that the Federal assistance is in fact provided only for additional local efforts.

Regulations would be established to assure that assistance under this program was not provided where grants were available under Federal programs; for example, landscaping in connection with construction of federally assisted highways.

Subsection (b) of this section would remove the present prohibition for grant assistance, under title VII, for "development costs," since the proposed beautification and improvement grants will be, in effect, for "development." Grants in the present and proposed open-space acquisition programs could still not be used for development, because of the statutory language in each program specifying the purposes for which the grants may be used.

Also, the present prohibition would remain against grant assistance, under title VII, for "ordinary State or local governmental expenses." Grants would be provided only for the direct cost of carrying out the proposed acquisition or other activities, rather than for associated administrative expenses.

Section 806. Use of funds for studies and publications: This section would permit the Housing Administrator to use open-space grant appropriations, not to exceed $100,000 per year, for undertaking and publishing open-space surveys and other studies in connection with activities under this title. Such studies and publications are already authorized under present law but must now be financed through separate appropriations. This makes it difficult, for example, to take advantage of study opportunities which arise after submission of the budget justification for that year. The undertaking of studies and the publication of information in connection with these activities is a function that should be carried out on a continuing basis as the needs and opportunities appear. Such a continuing approach is best achieved through the proposed limited authorization to utilize program grant funds.

Section 807. Conforming amendments: This section would make necessary technical and drafting amendments in the present language of title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 to provide for inclusion of the two proposed new grant programs described above.

Under subsection (a), the section heading of the present grant program, now entitled "Federal Grants," would be changed to "Grants for Preservation of Open-Space Land" in order to avoid confusion with the proposed new program of "Grants for Provision of Open-Space Land in Built-Up Urban Areas."

Under subsection (b), applicants under the open-space preservation program would continue to be approved by the Administrator as capable of carrying out the provisions and purposes of that program rather than, in addition, the provisions of the other new programs in the title.

Subsection (c) would broaden the language of the present requirement, in section 702(e), under which the Secretary of the Interior furnishes the Administrator information on recreational planning. It would require such information with respect to areas receiving assistance under the new urban beautification and improvement program, as well as areas where open-space land is acquired.

Subsection (d) would restrict the application of the requirements, in section 704, under which the Administrator must approve conversion of open-space land for which a grant has been made under this title to other uses and require assurance that equivalent other open-space land is provided. Such requirements are not appropriate for open-space land which receives assistance for beautification and improvement, rather than acquisition.

TITLE IX—RURAL HOUSING

Section 901. Loans for previously occupied buildings and minimum site acquisition: This section would amend section 501 of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans to farmers and other rural residents for the purchase of previously occupied dwellings and related facilities and farm service buildings and for minimum adequate building sites.

Section 902. Interest rate on direct rural housing loans: This section would increase to 5 percent the maximum interest rate on direct loans under section 502 of the Housing Act of 1949, except for loans to elderly persons in accordance with section 501(a) (3) and loans in accordance with sections 503 and 504, which would remain at 4 percent. It would also authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to charge fees on all title V loans.

Section 903. Insured rural housing loans: Subsection (a) of this section would add new sections 517 and 518 to the Housing Act of 1949. The new section 517 would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to insure loans, and make loans to be sold insured, in accordance with section 502, except that—

1. Insured section 502 loans to persons of low or moderate income would bear interest not above 5 percent and be limited to adequate housing modest in size, design, and cost and to an aggregate of $300 million per fiscal year.

2. For insured section 502 loans to persons other than those with low or moderate incomes the Secretary would be authorized to charge interest and insurance or service charges at rates comparable to those charged under section 203 of the National Housing Act.

The new section 517 would authorize a new revolving fund, the rural housing insurance fund, to finance insured section 502 loans and to be used in lieu of the agricultural credit insurance fund for section 514 domestic farm labor housing and section 515(b) elderly rental housing loans.

It would also authorize the Secretary of Agriculture—

1. To make insured section 502 loans with insured lenders' funds, or to make them out of the fund for insurance and resale, within the range of market prices for comparable loans, and to repurchase loans for servicing or liquidation. Loans made out of the fund and held unsold could not exceed $100 million at any one time.

2. To retain a borrower's mortgage to secure his indemnity and other obligations to the Secretary under the loan, while the note was held by an insured investor.

3. To retain out of payments by a borrower on an insured loan an annual charge in an amount specified in the insurance agreement. Of any such charge, an amount not exceeding 1 percent of the unpaid balance of the loan would be available for deposit in the fund. Any remainder would be available for annual appropriation to administrative expenses of the Farmers Home Administration.

4. To borrow from the Treasury, at cost-of-money interest rates, to meet loan insurance obligations and to make other authorized expenditures from the fund. Such borrowing could not be made to provide capital for making loans or to restore losses from discounted sales.

5. To utilize the fund for the purposes—

in addition to meeting loan insurance obligations and making loans for insurance and resale—of paying interest accruals on borrower payments before transmittal by the Farmers Home Administration to insured holders and of paying taxes, insurance, prior liens, and other expenses and advances to protect, service, collect, and liquidate the loans and security.

It would also authorize the Secretary to use the Rural Housing Insurance Fund and authority for insuring loans, or making loans to be sold insured, to finance housing and related facilities for domestic farm labor in accordance with section 514 and for senior citizens in accordance with section 515(b), not including the inconsistent provisions in these sections.

The new section 518 would group rural housing direct loans made under sections 502, 503, 504, and 515(a) of the 1949 act, collections therefrom, and funds available from appropriations or Treasury borrowings for such loans, into a new fund, the "Rural Housing Direct Loan Account," to be used for making such loans and making repayments to the Treasury. It would also establish the interest rate on borrowings from the Treasury for the Rural Housing Direct Loan Account at the same rate as provided in the new section 517(h) for borrowings for the Rural Housing Insurance Fund.

Subsection (b) would extend for 4 years, to October 1, 1969, the present unused balance of $101 million of the borrowing authority under section 511, as well as remove the present partial allocation to section 502 senior citizen loans exclusively.

Section 904. FNMA secondary market operations for insured rural housing loans: This section would authorize the Federal National Mortgage Association to include loans insured under title V of the 1949 act in its secondary market operations.

Section 905. Extension of rural housing authorizations: Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of this section would extend for 4 years, to October 1, 1969, the present authority—

1. For the Secretary of Agriculture to make section 503 loan contribution commitments;

2. For appropriations to finance section 504(a) grants, section 504(b) loans, section 516 assistance, and section 506 rural housing research and study programs; and

3. For making insured section 515(b) rental housing loans for elderly persons and families.

Subsection (b) would also raise to $50 million the authority for appropriations for section 516 assistance to provide low-rent housing for domestic farm labor.

Subsection (d) would extend the construction standards and technical services provisions of section 506(a) of the 1949 act to operations under the new provisions added by this title.

Section 906. Payment of interest to the Treasury on appropriations for rural housing loans: This section would direct the Secretary of Agriculture to pay into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury any surpluses from the Rural Housing Insurance Fund or Direct Loan Account. Would also provide for payment to the Treasury of interest, at cost-of-money rates, on any portions of future appropriations to the fund or the account authorized for making loans, until returned to miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

TITLE X—MISCELLANEOUS

Section 1001. Increase in authorization for urban planning grants: This section would remove the dollar limit on the authorization for appropriation of funds for section 701 urban planning grants and authorize such additional funds to be appropriated as may be necessary to carry out the urban planning assistance program.

Under section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954, the Housing Administrator is authorized to make grants (generally not to exceed two-thirds of the estimated costs) to States and local planning agencies to assist in preparing comprehensive development plans and programs. Grants are made for comprehensive planning of small communities and counties, metropolitan areas and urban regions, States, and interstate regions.

Thus, far $86.325 million of the presently authorized $105 million have been appropriated. The program level for fiscal year 1966 is estimated at $35 million. Appropriation of $16.3 million in addition to the $18.675 million remaining in unused authorization will be required to fund the program at this level. Additional funds would still, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

Section 1002. Increase in authorization for Federal-State training programs: This section would remove the dollar limit on the authorization for appropriation of funds for grants for Federal-State training programs and would authorize such additional funds to be appropriated as may be necessary to carry out the programs. Additional funds would, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

Under part I of title VIII of the Housing Act of 1964, the Housing Administrator is authorized to make matching grants to States to assist them in developing special training programs for technical and professional people who are, or are likely to be, employed by a governmental or public body which has responsibilities for community development. These matching grants may also be used to support State and local research on housing, public improvement programs, code problems, efficient land use, urban transportation, and similar community development problems.

It is estimated that $10 million in matching grants will be made under this program in fiscal year 1966. The Housing Act of 1964 authorized the appropriation of $10 million for such grants. Of this $10 million authorization, $5 million will be requested by the Housing Agency as a supplemental appropriation for fiscal year 1965, and $5 million will remain available for appropriation. To fund an estimated program level of $10 million for fiscal year 1966, appropriation of $5 million, in addition to the $5 million in unused authorization, will be required.

Section 1003. Increase in authorization for public works planning advances: This section would remove the existing dollar limitation on the amount that may be appropriated for the public works planning fund and authorize such additional funds to be appropriated to the fund as may be necessary to carry out the planning advance program. Additional funds would still, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

It is estimated that $25 million in planning advances will be made in fiscal year 1966. The Housing Act of 1964 authorized the appropriation of $20 million to the public works planning fund (in addition to amounts previously authorized and which had been appropriated). Of this $20 million in new authorizations provided by the Housing Act of 1964, $10 million has been appropriated and $10 million remains available for appropriation.

Repayments to the fund, during fiscal year 1966 (which are available to make planning advances) are estimated at $10 million. To fund the estimated program level of $25 million for fiscal year 1966, appropriation of $5 million, in addition to the $10 million in existing authorization and the estimated $10 million in repayments, will be required.

Under section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954, the Housing Administrator is authorized to advance interest-free funds to States, municipalities, and other public agencies to help finance the cost of planning various public works and facilities. These advances become repayable in whole or in part when construction of the public work planned is started.

Through the end of December 1964, a total of 3,817 applications for approximately $92 million have been approved under the program. The estimated cost of the projects aided by these public works planning advances totals $5.56 billion. As of the same date, 3,360 plans involving Federal advances of $84 million have been completed and 1,186 advances for $31 million have been repaid.

Section 1004. Advisory committees—technical provision: This section would delete an obsolete provision from section 601 of the Housing Act of 1949. The provision deleted exempts a member of an advisory committee appointed by the Housing and Home Finance Administrator or the heads of any of the constituents of the Housing Agency from certain cited conflict of interest laws. This provision was made obsolete and no longer necessary by section 2 of Public Law 87-849. That law enacted new provisions which accomplish the same purpose.

Section 1005. Public facility loans to nonprofit corporations: This section would permit the Administrator to make loans under the public facility loans program to private nonprofit corporations to finance the construction of works for the storage, treatment, purification, or distribution of water; sewage, sewage treatment and sewer facilities needed to serve small communities (with a population of less than 10,000) if he determines no existing public body is able to construct and operate such facilities.

Section 1006. FHA conforming amendments: This section would amend various sections of the National Housing Act to make their provisions conform to the provisions in title II of this bill with respect to the consolidation of FHA insurance funds.

Section 1007. Repeal of special provision in Urban Mass Transportation Act: This section would repeal a provision in the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 which requires that contractors, in providing facilities or equipment which have received loan or grant assistance under the act, "shall use only such manufactured articles as have been manufactured in the United States." There is no other Federal matching grant program which contains such a requirement. The President, in approving the Urban Mass Transportation Act, expressed hope that the provision would be repealed and said that it is incompatible with the trade policy this Nation is pursuing under the Trade Expansion Act.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I join the gentleman from Texas, Congressman PATMAN, in commending President Johnson for the very fine housing and urban development legislation he has submitted to the Congress. I too pledge my support for the administration's program introduced here today and recommend to the Members of this body its enactment into law.

This Nation will prosper and remain great only if the 70 percent of our population which live in the urban areas of our country can make for themselves a good life in the city. Almost all of the great growth in population which we know for a certainty we will experience in the next 40 years will be concentrated in the Nation's urban areas. The next 15 years, 30 million additional people will be added to our cities.

Mr. Speaker, I know—and the people I represent know—only too well the truth of President Johnson's words:

The modern city can be the most ruthless enemy of the good life, or it can be its servant. The choice is up to this generation of Americans. For this is truly the time of decision for the American city.

We must face up to the truly great needs that must be met in our cities—housing for low and moderate-income people; more and better schools; fresh water and an end to pollution of our air, rivers, and streams—and at least a taste of the natural beauty of trees and parks and open space.

We must help the cities plan to meet the needs of today and plan for the great increase in population they must accommodate.

The legislation presented to the Congress by the Johnson administration offers new strength and opportunity to the cities. If we make the effort, we can make of our cities a place where men can come together to live the good life. "A place where every man feels safe on his streets and in the house of his friends—where each individual's dignity and self-respect is strengthened by the respect and affection of his neighbors—where each of us can find the satisfaction and warmth which comes only from being a member of the community of man."

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ALBERT], I ask unanimous consent to correct the RECORD of March 3, 1965, on page 3915 the last sentence of the first paragraph in column 3 which reads, "He have an opportunity here today to send this bill to the White House." This sentence should read "We have an opportunity here today to send this bill to the White House." I ask unanimous consent that the permanent RECORD be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

VFW CONGRESSIONAL AWARD TO THE HONORABLE JOHN W. McCORMACK

(Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, one of the year's most notable occasions in this Capital City is the annual congressional dinner of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States. This has become a traditional event at which the VFW honors the Members of Congress.

Each year, on the occasion of this banquet, the VFW presents the VFW Congressional Award to a Member of Congress. This VFW Congressional Award has become recognized as one of the most meaningful and coveted awards for public service which it is within the power of any of our national organizations to make.

The announcement that this year's recipient would be the Honorable JOHN W. McCORMACK, Speaker of the House of Representatives, was made recently by VFW Commander in Chief John A. Jenkins.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that the Members of this House will join with me in extending to our respected Speaker our warmest congratulations upon his selection to receive this honor which he so thoroughly deserves.

Congratulations, too, should go to the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States for the wisdom, understanding, and insight they have demonstrated in selecting the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK for this Congressional Award.

Reflecting the affection which all Members of Congress have for our Speaker, and indicative of the respect in which the VFW is held by Members of Congress, I am informed that there will be an unusually large number of Members of both the Senate and this House at the VFW congressional dinner the evening of Tuesday, March 9, at the Sheraton-Park Hotel, at which time the beautifully sculptured bronze plaque, symbolizing the VFW Congressional Award, will be presented to the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK. The presentation will be made by the national commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Mr. John A. Jenkins, of Birmingham, Ala., who is well known to the Members of this House.

Because of the importance of this VFW award, I include, under leave to extend my remarks, the VFW's official descriptive data, together with the criteria for making the award.

THE VFW CONGRESSIONAL AWARD

The Veterans of Foreign Wars Congressional Award, conferred annually at the midwinter congressional dinner, is one of the several given by the VFW in recognition of meritorious achievement in various fields. It is unique in that it is the top award given to a Member of Congress by the organization. For this reason, it carries the simple inscription, "for outstanding service to the Nation."

By the awarding of this honor to one of our national legislators, the VFW seeks to dramatize the importance of the role of a freely elected legislature in serving the great ends of the Republic, maintaining true allegiance to the United States of America and fidelity to its Constitution and laws, the fostering of true patriotism, maintaining and extending the institutions of American freedom, and preserving and defending our country from all her enemies, at home or abroad.

The special committee on awards and citations, in establishing the award in 1963, decided that it should be given to a sitting Member of Congress; i.e., a Member who, at the time the award is conferred, is on active legislative service. The recipient may be a Member either of the House of Representatives or of the Senate. By custom, the granting of the award alternates between the two Houses. It is completely nonpartisan in nature.

In deciding who should receive this honor, the committee takes into account the Member's own attitude toward his legislative duties and responsibilities, the degree of respect held toward him by his fellow legislators, his efforts to harmonize civil-military relations and the success of those efforts, the balance he has been able to achieve between the national interests of his own constituency and State, his diligence and hard work, the contribution made to the effectiveness of the House of which he is a part, and the work of the committees to which he has been assigned, and above all, his devotion to American principles. The recipient, in short, should be an outstanding Congressman or Senator.

There are many ways in which distinguished service in the Halls of Congress can be performed for the people of our great country. In granting this award, the Veterans of Foreign Wars wishes to recognize such service, whether carried out in public view with deserved acclaim or performed in ways which gain little public recognition but which may be of equal or even greater value to the country.

The VFW Congressional Award endeavors to pay homage to that single legislator among the 535 Members of Congress who seems most nearly to meet the following criteria:

1. Contribution to the preservation and perpetuation of the ideals upon which the U.S. system of government is based;

2. Recognition by his colleagues of his service, whether that service be one of quiet dedication and hard work or one of achieving wide publicity, to the best and highest interests of the Nation;

3. Exemplification of the principles of civic duty shared by the VFW, which emphasize the individual, the community, the State and the Nation;

4. Unswerving loyalty to, and active performance in, the defense and security of the Nation against its foes whomever and wherever they may be;

5. Compassionate, practical attention to the needs of those men and women who have selflessly given of themselves to the service of America, not only in its wars, but in peaceful pursuits as well; and

6. Dedication to his legislative responsibilities over a period of years and continuous growth in legislative responsibility and experience, not only in fields of special interest to any particular group in American life but in his overall stewardship.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars knows and appreciates that there may be many Members of both Houses of Congress who meet these rigorous standards. It is the organization's hope that by granting this distinguished award it will call attention not only to the dedicated service of the recipient, in whichever House he may be serving, but to the other deserving Members who share the attributes and accomplishments for which the VFW Congressional Award is made each year.

The first award, bestowed on March 10, 1964, went to U.S. Senator CARL HAYDEN, of Arizona.

ARMY PROCUREMENT

(Mr. RUMSFELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks, and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. RUMSFELD. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this time simply to submit for the RECORD a statement regarding procurement procedures in the Army and comments on various General Accounting Office reports which I believe are significant and which I believe should be brought to the attention of the House.

I also might say that in addition to some critical comments, I intend to make some complimentary remarks about the Army and action they are taking today which I believe should go a long way toward improving procurement proceedings and reducing the cost of military procurement.

I would like to place before the House and the public today some details on Army procurement procedures, which, I believe, should be eye openers to Members of Congress who are engaged in our annual battle to hold down the Federal budget by eliminating waste from areas such as defense procurement.

These comments will take note of personnel policies that directly contribute to waste, the Army's apparent refusal to take meaningful action against employees found responsible for the waste, their failure to make public the names of employees against whom they do act, and the apparent coddling of higher Army officials whom the General Accounting Office—GAO—has said share the responsibility for the incredible snafu that I shall describe.

Briefly, the first case concerns six civilian electronics engineers against whom dismissal action was initiated by the Army Electronics Command, headquartered at Fort Monmouth, N.J., for their role in the repeated purchase of millions of dollars of electronics equipment that would not operate properly. The Army took the action only after it was goaded into moving by GAO.

When the Army announced in July that it was initiating the dismissal actions, the men involved—plus another who retired rather than waiting to be fired—protested that they were mere "scapegoats."

They claimed—correctly—that the GAO had found that higher ranking Army officials, both at Fort Monmouth and in Washington, had also been involved in the decisions that led to the waste.

In November, when the Army made the dismissal actions against five of the men final—charges against the sixth man were dropped—the ousted men announced that they would appeal, exposing the higher-ups also responsible and establishing their own alleged innocence.

So effective was that threat, apparently, that within 3 months, the Army announced that after negotiating with the dismissed men's attorney, four of the five men were being reinstated in their old jobs. The fifth was offered another job at a lower level of responsibility, but refused it.

And what was the Army's explanation for its action?

Maj. Gen. Frank W. Moorman, who heads the Electronics Command, said that the five men—who were fired for "gross negligence"—had refused, in November, to admit any responsibility in the snafu.

However, Moorman announced that they have now decided to acknowledge responsibility so they were being restored to duty.

And what was their penalty? Three of the men were fined 20 days' pay and one will forfeit 10 days' pay. For the remainder of the time since their dismissal in November, they will receive substantial back pay.

As frosting on this cake, the Army—which I am advised, had said last summer that it would identify the men involved after they were dismissed—has continued to refuse to identify the offenders to the press.

The Army also refuses, I am told, to discuss details of the case, or to answer questions from the press as to why the higher-ups mentioned in the GAO report also were not disciplined.

The details of this case are extraordinary. The procurement involved is "That work be speeded by the Commission to improve techniques by which departments and agencies evaluate the relative quality of candidates under their promotion plans, especially for financial management positions.

"That more financial management courses be included in all of the general-type management courses offered by the Commission, because an understanding of and appreciation for good financial management practices must become an integral part of the total management job.

"That the Commission work with all departments and agencies of Government in encouraging and arranging for employees to attend courses in financial management in nongovernmental institutions as an additional means of upgrading the quality of personnel in positions of responsibility in the field of financial management."

212(a) and contains a provision similar to the second proviso of section 212(a). The second proviso in section 410(f), however, provides for suspension on short notice of freight forwarder permits for failure to comply with the cargo insurance provisions under section 403(c) and the public-liability and property-damage insurance provisions under section 403(d). The draft bill would bring section 212(a) into further conformity with section 410(f) by removing this distinction.

From the standpoint of the traveling and shipping public there is as much reason to require motor carriers to keep their cargo and public-liability and property-damage insurance in force as there is to require freight forwarders to keep their insurance in effect. It is therefore desirable in the public interest that the Commission have the authority to suspend motor carrier rights, on short notice, when insurance lapses, or is canceled without replacement, until compliance is effected. The prospect of such action by the Commission should act as a deterrent to violations of this nature. An investigation under section 204(c) is not a satisfactory answer to the problem since such a proceeding may be somewhat lengthy and the public may be adversely affected should losses occur while it is pending.

The proposed change in section 204(c), which relates to investigations and the issuance of compliance orders, would bring that section into conformity with the suggested amendment to section 212(a) by similarly removing the restrictive nature of the present wording.

The amendments proposed in this draft bill would enable the Commission to administer the enforcement provisions of part II of the act more effectively.

S. 1733. A bill to make the civil forfeiture provisions of section 222(h) of the Interstate Commerce Act applicable to unlawful operations and safety violations by motor carriers, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (h) of section 222 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended (49 U.S.C. 322 (h)), is amended to read as follows:

"Any motor carrier, broker, or lessor, or other person, or any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof, who shall fail or refuse to keep, preserve, or forward any account, record, or memorandum in the substance, form, or manner prescribed in this part or in any rule, order, or regulation prescribed under this part; or who shall fail or refuse to comply with any requirement of this part with respect to the filing with the Commission or with any agency, office, or representative of the Commission, as prescribed by the Commission, any annual, periodical, or special report, or other report, tariff, schedule, contract, document, or data or with any rule, order, or regulation prescribed with respect to such filing; or who shall fail or refuse to make full, true, or correct answer to any question required by the Commission to be made under the provisions of this part; or who shall fail or refuse to comply with the provisions of section 203(c) or section 206(a)(1) or section 209(a)(1); or who shall fail or refuse to comply with any rule, regulation, requirement, or order promulgated by the Commission pursuant to the provisions of sections 204(a)(1), 204(a)(2), 204(a)(3), or 204(a)(3a), shall forfeit to the United States, the sum of $200 for each such offense, and, in case of a continuing violation not to exceed $100 for each additional day during which such failure or refusal shall continue. All forfeitures provided for in this paragraph shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States and shall be recoverable in a civil suit by the Commission or its duly authorized agent, brought in the district where the motor carrier or broker has its principal office, or in any district in which such motor carrier or broker was, at the time of the offense, authorized by the Commission, or by this part, to engage in operation as such motor carrier or broker, or in the district where such forfeiture may accrue; or in any district where the offender is found. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such offender is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found."

The recommendation and justification accompanying Senate bill 1733 are as follows:

RECOMMENDATION No. 22

This proposed bill would give effect to legislative recommendation No. 22 of the Interstate Commerce Commission as set forth on page 75 of its 78th annual report as follows:

"We recommend that section 222(h) be amended so as to (a) extend the civil forfeiture provisions therein to unlawful operations and safety violations by motor carriers, (b) permit the Commission to institute forfeiture actions directly in the courts, and (c) increase substantially the amount of the forfeitures prescribed."

JUSTIFICATION

The purpose of the attached draft bill is to provide the Interstate Commerce Commission with a more effective means of coping with the spread of illegal and so-called "gray area" motor carrier operations which are undermining the strength of the Nation's regulated common carrier system. It is also designed to buttress the Commission's intensified motor carrier safety enforcement program.

Under existing law, procedures for dealing with certain motor carrier violations are often slow and cumbersome, and frequently ineffective. Criminal prosecutions, for example, must be brought in the district in which the violations occurred. Thus, in the case of multiple violations by a carrier with extensive territorial operations it may be necessary to institute separate actions in several district courts if all of the violations are to be covered. Civil forfeiture proceedings, on the other hand, may be instituted in the district in which the carrier maintains its principal office, where it is authorized to operate, or where it can be found. Moreover, less time is needed for investigating violations because of the difference in quantum of proof required in such proceedings.

Under the proposed amendment a civil forfeiture action could be brought against a for-hire motor carrier for transporting property without a required certificate or permit. Such action would be available whether or not the carrier had taken steps to give the operation an appearance of legality, but the principal enforcement advantage that would accrue would be when the operator, by means of an alleged vehicle lease or an alleged purchase of the commodity hauled, has attempted to give the operation an appearance of private carriage. More specifically, an owner of a vehicle may enter into a vehicle lease arrangement with a manufacturer under which the manufacturer allegedly uses the vehicle in private carrier operations. Such arrangements range all the way from a bona fide lease of a vehicle, at one extreme, to an obvious sham at the other. No enforcement action is, of course, involved in the case of a bona fide lease. The obvious shams, however, are the subject of criminal prosecution.

While there are a number of vehicle arrangements which the Commission believes to be illegal for-hire carriage by the vehicle owner, it is doubtful that a criminal conviction could be secured because of the necessity of showing knowledge and willfulness and proving guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. In addition, in a criminal proceeding there can be no appeal from an acquittal. Such cases are now handled in the civil courts, but an injunction against such operations in the future is all that can be secured. The possibility of a civil injunction action, where there is no pecuniary penalty or criminal stigma involved, has very little effect as a deterrent to would-be violators. A civil forfeiture action, such as that proposed, carrying with it substantial monetary penalties should, on the other hand, have a strong deterrent effect against questionable leasing arrangements.

Operations sometimes referred to as "buy and sell" operations are very similar in effect. By allegedly purchasing merchandise the transporter represents the operation to be private carriage. As in the case of leasing arrangements these operations have many variations, some of which present close questions as to whether the operation constitutes for-hire carriage. Some are obviously illegal for-hire operations and are handled as criminal cases. Others, however, are not so clearly unlawful as to warrant criminal action for the reasons stated above in connection with questionable leasing arrangements, but which, in the Commission's views, are nevertheless unlawful. Such operations may be continued for substantial periods during the pendency of a civil injunction proceeding and before a cease and desist order is issued by the court. If the proposed amendment were enacted a number of these cases could be made the subject of a civil forfeiture action in which, if successful, the operator would suffer a money judgment or forfeiture.

Enactment of the proposed legislation would also greatly facilitate the Commission's enforcement activities in the important area of motor carrier safety. Although a very high percentage of cases involving violations of the Commission's safety regulations are disposed of by pleas of guilty or nolo contendere, investigations looking toward such prosecutions are nevertheless extremely time consuming because of the necessity of proving to the court every element of the alleged criminal offense. Since the quantum of proof required in a civil forfeiture proceeding is not as great as that required in a criminal action, a substantial amount of the time that must now be spent in preparing for criminal prosecutions in such cases could be devoted to handling a larger number of civil forfeiture proceedings.

The Commission's efforts at more effective and expeditious enforcement would also be greatly enhanced if it were authorized to institute forfeiture proceedings directly in the courts instead of proceeding through the Department of Justice as it is now required to do. Delays would be avoided not only by eliminating the mechanics involved in taking the extra step, but also by the elimination of such delays as may be caused by the time consumed in convincing the U.S. attorney that an action should be filed.

These proposed amendments, coupled with a substantial increase in the amount of the forfeitures prescribed, would strengthen the Commission's hand considerably in dealing with some of the principal factors contributing to the decline of regulated common carriers.

AMENDMENTS TO THE ADMINISTRATION'S HOUSING MEASURE, S. 1354 (AMENDMENTS NOS. 65, 66, 67, AND 68)

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I send to the desk, for printing and appropriate reference, four amendments to S. 1354, the administration's housing bill. The amendments would—

Permit the Housing and Home Finance Agency Administrator to waive the present 15-percent limitation on allocation of public housing funds for use by any one State, upon a finding that imposition of the limitation would cause hardship to a large number of low-income families in that State. The result of the present limitation is that fewer dwelling units are built in States with higher construction costs. Waiver of the limitation would provide authority for the allocation of more low-rental housing in New York as well as other States with large urban centers. The continuing 15-percent dollar limitation for any one State is unrealistic as well as unfair. It ignores the need for larger amounts of low-income housing in the high-cost, densely populated urban areas; it does not recognize the fact that metropolitan areas ignore State boundaries; it inhibits the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency from allocating public housing on an areawide and regional basis; and it is out of step with the growing emphasis on area development that has been recognized in other sections of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965. It is a relic of the past; it should be discarded, now.

Increase the Federal cost limitation on construction of rooms for low-rental housing by $1,000 per room from the existing limitation of $2,750 per room in New York and $3,750 per room for housing for the elderly existing in areas of acute need and high cost such as New York. Increasing the per room construction cost limitation would permit more desirable and livable low-rent housing.

Expand relocation assistance for small businesses displaced by urban renewal projects to include payments of up to $10,000 upon relocation. The present limitation on relocation compensation is $1,500, but this figure was found to be totally inadequate by the Select Committee on Real Property Acquisition of the House Committee on Public Works. This additional payment is designed to aid small businesses which are less able to adjust to a new environment than the larger and more flexible business enterprises.

Strengthen the existing National Housing Act middle-income program by providing for a program of Federal matching grants for State and local contributions to such housing projects. The amendment would permit the Federal Government to make matching grants equal to one-half the value of State and local contributions to the Federal program and thus permit substantial reductions for existing middle-income programs. Contributions could take the form of local tax abatement or donation of land prior to construction of a project or local rent subsidy. Where the State or local contribution was made in the form of tax abatement or rent subsidy on an annual basis, the Federal contribution could be made yearly up to 25 percent of the development cost of the housing project. In New York City, for example, where real estate taxes on a $12,500 unit amount to approximately $490 per unit, a matching grant of full value equal to the dollar amount of a tax abatement of 50 percent would result in a reduction of $41.50 per month for a rental of a single unit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received, printed, and appropriately referred.

The amendments (Nos. 65, 66, 67, and 68), were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

VOTING RIGHTS—AMENDMENT (AMENDMENT NO. 68)

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to S. 1564, the voting rights bill of 1965. In the amendment there are incorporated several recommended revisions.

This amendment is intended, first to clarify and improve the language used in the original bill. Secondly, each of the substantive changes is designed to make the bill a clear implement of congressional authority under the 15th amendment; and finally, the amendment is intended to broaden and to strengthen the assurance to every American citizen that his rights under the 15th amendment shall be held inviolate. No one who has taken an oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States can disagree with that objective.

Mr. President, many times in the past I have joined with my southern colleagues in opposing so-called civil rights legislation. I have willingly participated in full and extended debate over these issues.

I felt then, as I feel today, that most of those measures granted rights to one person at the expense of another. I have fought such provisions as first, the Fair Employment Practices Commission, because it tells an employer who he must hire in his own private business; second, the Public Accommodations law, because under this law the Federal Government brings its awesome power to bear against private businessmen, dictating whom they must admit, and whom they must serve in their place of business, or go to jail; and third, the so-called genocide provision, because it permits the Federal Government to hang like a dagger above the heads of a sovereign State the threat that all Federal funds will be cut off, unless such State bows to the mandate of so-called civil rights.

And, Mr. President, I have fought such legislation for many other reasons—but never because it sought to protect the right of all American citizens to register and to vote.

On the contrary, in each instance that I have opposed these measures, I have always made it expressly and abundantly clear that I was not thereby opposing the right to vote. It is my belief that every American citizen, in every State, regardless of his race or his color, should not only be allowed to exercise his franchise; he should be encouraged to do so. In my judgment, franchise and freedom are inseparable in America.

In the State of Florida, Mr. President, we have no literacy laws. We outlawed the poll tax 25 years ago. We go out into the highways and the byways and actively seek the vote of every citizen. The overwhelming majority of the citizens of Florida are in full and complete accord with the 15th amendment and all that it stands for.

Less than 24 hours after the President announced his plan to ask for voting rights legislation, I told the people of my State by newspaper, radio, and television, that I hoped, to be able to support such legislation.

However, I have now had an opportunity to study carefully each of the provisions of the bill that was sent to Congress. We should not let such a bill become our final choice.

It is not only unclear in its language, unfair in its application, and unsafe in its total effect upon our system—it is patently unconstitutional in more than one respect.

In our concern for the rights of citizens under the 15th amendment, we should not let haste and anxiety dictate a remedy worse than the disease.

We should not discriminate against one section of the Nation on the grounds of discrimination. Pure hearts and motives know no State or regional boundaries.

We should not assign to the Attorney General, whose function is to enforce the law, the dual capacity of passing judgment upon the offender. That principle is repulsive to our system of government and inconsistent with elementary criminal jurisprudence.

We should not cite judicial delays as a basis for abandoning the judicial system, or else we may establish a precedent that the next generation may find expedient to follow—and the next—and the next—until the erosion process is complete.

We should be guided by the 15th amendment, which Congress has explicit authority to implement. The measure we pass, unlike the original bill, should guarantee to every citizen in every State the right to vote regardless of race or color—and we should protect that right in every State.

It is to meet these objections, Mr. President, that I have drafted my revisions to S. 1564. The amendment I offer today would achieve the following results:

First. At the very outset, it acknowledges that every State has the constitutional right to impose voter qualifications and procedures, so long as they do not conflict with the 15th amendment and other provisions of the Constitution.

Second. Under the original bill, the Attorney General is empowered to trigger the appointment of examiners, without court action, whenever (a) he receives 20 or more written complaints from citizens of a State or political subdivision alleging their voting rights are being violated; or (b) he determines, in his own discretion, that such examiners should be appointed.

The amendment provides that the Attorney General may not act on his own discretion, but must first receive 20 or more such complaints. At that point, the Attorney General may apply to the appropriate court of appeals for preventive relief.

MEMBERSHIP AND PARTICIPATION BY THE UNITED STATES IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC COMMISSION

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, by request I introduce, for appropriate reference, a joint resolution to amend the joint resolution of January 28, 1948, providing for membership and participation by the United States in the South Pacific Commission.

This legislation has been requested by the Acting Secretary of State, and I am introducing the proposed legislation in order that there may be a specific bill to which Members of the Senate and the public may direct their attention and comments.

I reserve my right to support or oppose this bill, as well as any suggested amendments to it, when the matter is considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be printed at this point in the RECORD, together with a memorandum of justification and the letter from the Acting Secretary of State to the Vice President with regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the joint resolution, memorandum, and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 71) to amend the joint resolution of January 28, 1948, providing for membership and participation by the United States in the South Pacific Commission, introduced by Mr. FULBRIGHT, by request, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that Section 3(a) of the joint resolution entitled "Joint Resolution providing for membership and participation by the United States in the South Pacific Commission and authorizing an appropriation therefor", as amended (22 U.S.C. 280b) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) such sums as may be required annually for the payment by the United States of its proportionate share of the expenses of the Commission and its auxiliary and subsidiary bodies, as set forth in Article XIV of the Agreement establishing the South Pacific Commission."

The memorandum and letter presented by Mr. FULBRIGHT are as follows:

MEMORANDUM OF JUSTIFICATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO REMOVE STATUTORY RE- STRICTIONS ON U.S. CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE SOUTH PACIFIC COMMISSION

Current legislation providing for U.S. participation in the South Pacific Commission restricts the authority to make appropriations to fiscal years 1965 and 1966 in amounts not to exceed $150,000.

The proposed draft of an amendment to Public Law 403, 80th Congress, would replace these restrictions by a continuing authorization without limitation as to amount.

The membership of the Commission consists of the state of Western Samoa, which became a member in 1964, and 5 Governments—Australia, France, New Zealand, the United Kingdom, and the United States—which together administer some 15 territories in the Pacific Ocean. These territories are scattered over an ocean area approximating one-fifth of the world's surface, about a third being in the U.S. sphere of responsibility. The U.S. territories covered by the Commission's activities include American Samoa and Guam as well as the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The entire complex of islands in the Commission's geographical bounds is of strategic importance to the United States.

As a regional organization with the only permanent reservoir of expertise in the South Pacific area, the Commission is uniquely qualified to assist in the economic and social development of the South Pacific people. It supplements and complements the individual territorial efforts of the administering governments and has proved an effective method of mobilizing the resources of these governments in a common effort. At the same time, it provides a forum for the indigenous people to voice their views on the development of the region.

Concentrating in the fields of health, and economic and social development, the Commission carries out its work largely through a program of research, technical assistance, and the collection, publication, and distribution of scientific and technical information.

In the health field, attention centers on organizing research into unsolved health problems, health education, and maternal and child care. In the area of economic development, the Commission is currently concerned with improvement of basic crops, fisheries, and boatbuilding, and eradication of plant disease and pests. The social development program deals with community education, language training, cooperatives, library development, and reading aids.

In order to respond more effectively to the regional needs of the area, the Commission considers desirable a significant strengthening of all these activities over the next few years. Among the projects of high priority are the following:

1. A broad program of improving village sanitation. Emphasis would be placed on the control of insects and rats, the latter being a serious economic as well as health problem in the South Pacific.

2. Expansion of the maternal and child health program. This would include adding a public health nurse to the staff to assist in conducting courses for auxiliary staff in territories, refresher courses for midwives, and seminars on social pediatrics.

3. Strengthening of the Community Education Training Center in the Fiji Islands.

4. Establishment of a regional language-teaching institute for the Pacific region where teachers and administrators could be trained in new methods of teaching English.

5. Intensification of plant production improvement. As part of a program to introduce commercial crops, the Commission hopes to expand the service of supplying new, disease-resistant species of the breadfruit, cacao, and taro. If the basic research on insect control results in increased coconut production, a regional research and training center for coconut products and byproducts is considered a logical followup.

The budget for calendar year 1965, approved at an assessment level of $747,799, provides for a start on this work program. Since the United States is assessed at 20 percent of the Commission's budget, our share of 1965 expenditures is $149,559. This amount, to be funded from U.S. fiscal year 1966 appropriations, is just under the statutory limitation of $150,000 on our contribution. This ceiling, however, will be inadequate to cover our obligations under subsequent budgets which must increase over the 1965 level if the important projects outlined above are to be carried out.

As between the raising of the annual ceiling on the amounts authorized to be appropriated and eliminating the ceiling entirely, the Department recommends the latter.

A ceiling could prevent the United States from living up to the terms of the agreement establishing the South Pacific Commission which calls for contribution of a fixed percentage of the budget rather than a fixed amount. The other member countries, preferring to relate their financial support of the Commission to the intrinsic value of proposed programs and the overall effectiveness of the Commission, have not enacted such legislation. If they did so, it would result in financial chaos for the Commission since the size of the budget would be determined by a series of unilateral actions and not by multilateral negotiations.

We believe that the absence of a statutory limitation on the U.S. contribution would not result in sharp increases in the Commission budget, since the other contributors would have to pay their share of any expenses. Except for Western Samoa, their share is not much lower than that of the United States and in one case is significantly higher. Current assessments percentages are: Australia, 32; France, 14; New Zealand, 16; United Kingdom, 17; United States, 20; Western Samoa, 1. The relative size of their contributions constrains the other members to approach budget expansion with caution. Moreover, these are responsible governments which, while responsive to the Organization's real needs, have demonstrated a serious interest in the economical operation of the Commission.

The Department also sees advantage in having Congress authorize contributions to the Commission on the basis of a continuing authority. Prior to the adoption of an amendment in 1964 which restricted the authorization for appropriation to fiscal years 1965 and 1966, the Congress had provided a continuing authorization. A return to this arrangement seems appropriate because both the terms of the agreement establishing the Commission set no terminal date to the Commission's life, and the language of the joint resolution authorizing U.S. membership in the Commission places no limits on the duration of that membership. Reestablishment of the continuing authority would, therefore, serve to underline our positive interest in the future development of the Commission. This would in no way affect the availability of officials of the executive branch to testify before appropriate committees of the Congress upon request, in addition to the regular annual review by the Committees on Appropriations.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 8, 1965.

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
President of the Senate.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I submit herewith a proposed draft of an amendment to Public Law 403, 80th Congress, which provides for membership and participation by the United States in the South Pacific Commission.

By replacing the present authorization for appropriations in fiscal years 1965 and 1966 in amounts not exceeding $150,000 by a continuing authorization without limitation as to amount, the amendment would permit the United States to play its proper role in the expanded work of this important Commission.

I do not believe the elimination of the statutory limitation on our contribution would lead to a sharp increase in the U.S. contribution. A detailed description of the Commission's work and our reasons for proposing the amendment is enclosed.

I hope the Congress can give favorable consideration to the amendment during the present session so that the U.S. representative will be able to participate in the fall in the discussion and approval of the program to be included in the Commission's budget for calendar year 1966.

A similar communication is being sent to the Speaker of the House.

The Department of State has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this proposal to the Congress for its consideration.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE W. BALL,
Acting Secretary.

AMENDMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1965—AMENDMENT (AMENDMENT NO. 101)

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to S. 1354—the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965—and ask that it be printed, and appropriately referred. The purpose of this amendment is to provide grants to cities with workable programs to carry out programs of demolition of dilapidated structures in residential neighborhoods.

For many years cities across the Nation have been waging a battle against decay in residential neighborhoods, with Federal assistance. Thousands of acres of slums have been cleared for public and private redevelopment. Other vast areas have been designated as conservation neighborhoods. In these a vital instrument to achieve neighborhood betterment has been the removal of buildings which are too deteriorated to be rehabilitated.

Had these structures been permitted to remain, conservation efforts would have been severely hindered and sometimes completely blocked. While extensive efforts, involving substantial expenditures are being made to clear areas already blighted and to conserve neighborhoods which have moved significantly along toward becoming totally blighted, more preventative measures are needed.

Many neighborhoods in our cities are in generally excellent condition. In a substantial number of these, however, an occasional building has been abandoned by its owner. This has resulted in a creation of a condition hazardous to the health and welfare of the surrounding area.

These dilapidated buildings serve as an attractive nuisance to children and as a fire hazard. Their existence produces a negative effect on adjoining property owners in terms of their desire to maintain their own property. It is readily seen that one such building can be the seed of a new blighted neighborhood. The removal of these buildings, where it can be done under local law, becomes an extremely burdensome expense to the community and in almost every case more burdensome than the community can bear alone. Therefore in view of the deep involvement of the Federal Government in programs aimed at the elimination of slums, it seems essential that the elimination of the first sign of blight, that is, a single decaying structure, will in many instances be the key action in keeping a neighborhood as a desirable place in which to live.

The more that can be done to keep a neighborhood from becoming blighted, the less we will have to spend on future clearance of large areas. Commonsense seems to require that the removal of scattered, dilapidated buildings will provide a relatively inexpensive way of saving vast parts of our cities from becoming urban renewal projects through their fall into decay.

We have already made significant changes in Federal law in terms of strengthening local code enforcement activities. This will be another major step in that direction.

7 SEC. 101. (a) The Housing and Home Finance Ad-
8 ministrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator")
9 is authorized to make, and contract to make, annual pay-
10 ments to a "housing owner" on behalf of "qualified tenants",
11 as those terms are defined herein, in such amounts and under 12 such circumstances as are prescribed in or pursuant to this
13 section. In no case shall a contract provide for such pay-
14 ments with respect to any housing for a period exceeding
15 forty years. The aggregate amount of the contracts to make
16 such payments shall not exceed amounts approved in appro-
17 priation Acts and shall not exceed $50,000,000 per annum
18 prior to July 1, 1966, which maximum dollar amount shall
19 be increased by $50,000,000 on July 1 in each of the years
20 1966, 1967, and 1968.

(b) As used in this section, the term “housing owner” means a private nonprofit corporation or other entity, a limited dividend corporation or other entity, or a cooperative housing corporation, which is a mortgagor under section 221 (d) (3) of the National Housing Act and which, after

1 the enactment of this section, has been approved for mort-
 2 gage insurance thereunder and has been approved for re-
 3 ceiving the benefits of this section: Provided, That no
 4 payments under this section may be made with respect to
 5 any property financed with a mortgage receiving the benefits
 6 of the interest rate provided for in the proviso in section
 7 221 (d) (5) of that Act.

8 (c) As used in this section, the term "qualified tenant"
 9 means any individual or family who has, pursuant to criteria
 10 and procedures established by the Administrator, been de-
 11 termined—

12 (1) to be unable to obtain standard privately owned
 13 housing in the area at a rental which is equal to or less
 14 than one-fourth of the income of such individual or 15 family; and

16 (2) to be one of the following—

17 (A) displaced by governmental action;

18 (B) sixty-two years of age or older (or, in the 19 case of a family, to have a head who is, or whose 20 spouse is, sixty-two years of age or over) ;

21 (C) physically handicapped (or, in the case
 22 of a family, to have a head who is, or whose spouse
 23 is, physically handicapped) ; or

24 (D) occupying substandard housing.

25 (d) The amount of the annual payment with respect to

1 any dwelling unit shall not exceed the amount by which
2 the fair market rental for such unit exceeds one-fourth of the
3 tenant's income as determined by the Administrator pur-
4 suant to procedures and regulations established by him.

5 (e) (1) For purposes of carrying out the provisions of
6 this section, the Administrator shall establish criteria and
7 procedures for determining the eligibility of occupants and
8 rental charges, including criteria and procedures with respect
9 to periodic review of tenant incomes and periodic adjustment
10 of rental charges. The Administrator shall issue, upon the 11 request of a housing owner, certificates as to the following
12 facts concerning the individuals and families applying for
13 admission to, or residing in, dwellings of such owner:

14 (A) the income of the individual or family; and

15 (B) whether the individual or family was displaced
16 by governmental action, is elderly, is physically handi-
17 capped, or is (or was) occupying substandard housing.

18 (2) Procedures adopted by the Administrator hereunder
19 shall provide for recertifications of the incomes of occupants,
20 except the elderly, at intervals of two years (or at shorter
21 intervals in cases where the Administrator may deem it
22 desirable) for the purpose of adjusting rental charges and
23 annual payments on the basis of occupants' incomes, but in 24 no event shall rental charges adjusted under this section for
25 any dwelling exceed the fair market rental of the dwelling.

1 (3) The Administrator may enter into agreements, or
2 authorize housing owners to enter into agreements, with
3 public or private agencies for services required in the selec-
4 tion of qualified tenants, including those who may be ap-
5 proved, on the basis of the probability of future increases
6 in their incomes, as lessees under an option to purchase
7 dwellings or cooperative ownership interests therein, and
8 in the establishment of rentals. The Administrator is
9 authorized (without limiting his authority under any other
10 provision of law) to delegate to any such public or private 11 agency his authority to issue certificates pursuant to this
12 subsection.

13 (f) Section 101 (c) of the Housing Act of 1949 is 14 amended by inserting “ (i) ” after “a mortgage under” in the 15 first proviso and by inserting immediately before the colon at 16 the end of such proviso the following: “, or (ii) section

18 respect to the mortgaged property are made or are to be
19 made under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Develop-
20 ment Act of 1965, except that no such mortgage shall be in-
21 sured, and no commitment to insure such a mortgage shall 22 be issued, with respect to property in any community for
23 which a workable program for community improvement
24 was required and in effect at the time a contract for a loan
25 or capital grant was entered into under this title, or a con-

1 tract for annual contributions or capital grants was entered
2 into pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937,
3 unless there is a workable program for community improve-
4 ment which meets the requirements of this subsection in
5 effect in such community at the time of such insurance or
6 commitment”.

7 (g) The Administrator is authorized to make such rules
8 and regulations, to enter into such agreements, and to adopt
9 such procedures as he may deem necessary or desirable to
10 carry out the provisions of this section. Nothing contained
11 in this section shall affect the authority of the Federal Hous-
12 ing Commissioner with respect to any housing assisted under 13 this section and under section 221 (d) (3) of the National
14 Housing Act, including his authority to prescribe occupancy
15 requirements under other provisions of law or to determine
16 the portion of any such housing which may be occupied by
17 qualified tenants.

18 (h) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums
19 as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this sec-
20 tion, including, but not limited to, such sums as may be neces-
21 sary to make annual payments, pay for services provided
22 under (or pursuant to agreements entered into under) sub-
23 section (e), and provide administrative expenses.

24 (i) Section 114 (c) (2) of the Housing Act of 1949 is
25 amended by inserting before the colon at the end of the first

1 proviso the following: “, or a dwelling unit assisted under
2 section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 3 1965”.

4 (j) On or before January 1, 1968, the Administrator
5 shall submit to the Congress a full report of operations under
6 this section, together with his recommendations with respect
7 thereto.

9 TION OF INTEREST RATE; POOLING OF MORTGAGES FOR 10 SALE

11 SEC. 102. (a) The fifth sentence of section 221 (f) of 12 the National Housing Act is amended by striking out “sub-
13 section (d) (2) or (d) (4) after September 30, 1965, or 14 under subsection (d) (3) after September 30, 1965,” and
15 inserting in lieu thereof “this section after October 1, 1969,”.

16 (b) The proviso in section 221 (d) (5) of such Act is 17 amended by striking out “not less than the annual rate of 18 interest determined” and inserting in lieu thereof “not less
19 than the lower of (A) 3 per centum per annum, or (B) the 20 annual rate of interest determined”.

21 (c) Section 302 (c) of such Act is amended by insert-

2 ment of the Housing and Urban Development Act of
3 1965, there are authorized to be appropriated from time to
4 time such amounts as may be necessary to reimburse the
5 Association for the amount of the differential (including
6 interest, other costs, and a fair proportion of administrative
7 expense) between (1) the total outlay with respect to out-
8 standing participations or other instruments in an amount not
9 to exceed the dollar amount of such below-market interest
10 rate mortgages, and (2) the total receipts from such 11 mortgages.”

12 LOW-RENT HOUSING IN PRIVATE ACCOMMODATIONS

13 SEC. 103. (a) The United States Housing Act of 1937
14 is amended by redesignating section 23 as section 24, and by 15 adding after section 22 the following new section:

16 “LOW-RENT HOUSING IN PRIVATE ACCOMMODATIONS

17 “SEC. 23. (a) For the purpose of providing a supple-
18 mentary form of low-rent housing which will aid in assuring
19 a decent place to live for every citizen and promote efficiency
20 and economy in the program under this Act by taking full
21 advantage of vacancies or potential vacancies in the private 22 housing market, each public housing agency shall, to the 23 maximum extent consistent with the achievement of the 24 objectives of this Act, provide low-rent housing under this
25 Act in the form of low-rent housing in private accommoda-

1 tions in accordance with this section where such housing in
2 private accommodations can be provided at a cost equal to or
3 less than housing in projects assisted under other provisions
4 of this Act. As used in this section the term 'low-rent hous-
5 ing in private accommodations' means dwelling units in an
6 existing structure, leased from a private owner, which provide
7 decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations and
8 related facilities effectively supplementing the accommoda-
9 tions and facilities in low-rent housing assisted under the
10 other provisions of this Act in a manner calculated to meet
11 the total housing needs of the community in which they are
12 located. As used in this section, the term 'owner' means
13 any person or entity having the legal right to lease or sub-
14 lease property containing one or more dwelling units as
15 described in this section.

16 “(b) Beginning as soon as practicable after the date of 17 the enactment of this section, each public housing agency
18 shall conduct a continuing survey and listing of the available
19 dwelling units within the community or communities under 20 its jurisdiction which provide decent, safe, and sanitary
21 dwelling accommodations and related facilities and are, or
22 may be made, suitable for use as low-rent housing in private
23 accommodations under this section.

24 “(c) Each public housing agency, by notification to 25 the owners of housing listed under subsection (b), or by

1 publication or advertisement, or otherwise, shall from time
2 to time make known to the public in the community or com-
3 munities under its jurisdiction the anticipated need for dwell-
4 ing units in such community or communities to be used as
5 low-rent housing in private accommodations under this sec-
6 tion, inviting the owners of such dwelling units to make
7 available for purposes of this section one or more of such
8 units (not exceeding 10 per centum of the units in any single 9 structure except to the extent that the agency, because of 10 the limited number of units in the structure or for any other
11 reason, determines that such limit should not be applied).
12 The public housing agency shall conduct appropriate inspec-
13 tions of the units offered to be made available in any 14 residential structure by the owner thereof in response to 15 such invitation, and if—

16 “(1) it finds that such units are, or may be made,
17 suitable for use as low-rent housing in private accom-
18 modations within the meaning of subsection (a), and

19 “(2) the rentals to be charged for such units, as 20 negotiated and agreed to by the agency and the owner
21 of the structure in a manner consistent with subsection
22 (d) (2), are within the financial range of families of 23 low income,

24 such agency may approve such units for use as low-rent
25 housing in private accommodations in accordance with (and

1 subject to the applicable limitations contained in) this sec-
2 tion. Each public housing agency shall maintain and keep
3 current a list of units approved by it under this subsection,
4 including such information with respect to each such unit
5 as it may consider necessary or appropriate.

6 “(d) To the extent of contracts for annual contributions
7 entered into by the Authority with a public housing agency
8 under section 10 (e), such agency may enter into contracts
9 with the owners of structures containing dwelling units ap-
10 proved under subsection (c) for the use of such units in 11 accordance with this section. Each such contract with an
12 owner shall provide (with respect to any unit) that—

13 “(1) the selection of tenants for such unit shall be 14 the function of the owner, subject to the provisions of 15 the contract between the Authority and the agency;

16 “(2) the rental and other charges to be received by 17 the owner shall be negotiated and agreed to by the 18 agency and the owner, and the rental and other charges
19 to be paid by the tenant shall be determined in accord-
20 ance with the standards applicable to units in low-rent
21 housing projects assisted under the other provisions of 22 this Act;

23 “(3) the agency shall have the sole right to give
24 notice to vacate, with the owner having the right to

1 make representations to the agency for termination of
2 a tenancy;

3 “(4) maintenance and replacements (including
4 redecoration) shall be in accordance with the standard
5 practice for the building concerned, as established by
6 the owner and agreed to by the agency; and

7 “(5) the agency and the owner shall carry out such
8 other appropriate terms and conditions as may be
9 mutually agreed to by them.

10 Each contract between a public housing agency and an 11 owner entered into under this subsection shall be for a term
12 of not less than twelve months nor more than thirty-six
13 months, and shall be renewable by such agency and owner
14 at the expiration of such term.

15 “(e) The annual contribution under this Act for a proj-
16 ect of a public housing agency for low-rent housing in private
17 accommodations under this section in lieu of any other guar-
18 anteed contribution authorized by section 10 shall not exceed 19 the amount of the fixed annual contribution which would be
20 established under this Act for a newly constructed project
21 by such public housing agency designed to accommodate the
22 comparable number, sizes, and kinds of families. The
23 period over which payments will be made to a public hous-
24 ing agency for a project of low-rent housing in private
25 accommodations under this section, and the aggregate

1 amount of such payments, under a contract for annual
2 contributions, shall be determined on the basis of the number
3 of units in the community or communities under the juris-
4 diction of such agency which are in use (or can reasonably
5 be expected to be placed in use) as low-rent housing in
6 private accommodations under this section, taking into ac-
7 count the terms of the leases under which such units are (or
8 will be) so used. In addition, contracts for financial assist-
9 ance entered into by the Authority with a public housing
10 agency pursuant to this section shall provide for reimburse-
11 ment of reasonable and necessary expenses incurred by such
12 agency in conducting surveys, listings, and inspections de-
13 scribed in subsections (b) and (c).

14 “(f) On or before January 1, 1968, the Authority shall
15 submit to the Congress a full report of operations under this 16 section, together with its recommendations with respect
17 thereto.”

18 (b) The last sentence of section 2(1) of such Act is 19 amended by striking out “Income limits for occupancy and
20 rents” and inserting in lieu thereof “Except as otherwise pro-
21 vided in section 23, income limits for occupancy and rents”.

22 (c) The provisions of sections 10(h) and 15(7) of the 23 United States Housing Act of 1937, and the workable pro-
24 gram requirement in section 10(e) of such Act and section

1 101 (c) of the Housing Act of 1949, shall not apply to low-
2 rent housing in private accommodations provided under sec-
3 tion 23 of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

4 LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING

5 SEC. 104. (a) Section 10 (e) of the United States
6 Housing Act of 1937 is amended by inserting after "per 7 annum," the following: "which limit shall be increased by 8 $47,000,000 on the date of the enactment of the Housing
9 and Urban Development Act of 1965, and by further
10 amounts of $47,000,000 on July 1 in each of the years
11 1966, 1967, and 1968, respectively,".

12 (b) Section 10 (c) of such Act is amended by striking
13 out "And provided further" and inserting in lieu thereof
14 "Provided further", and by inserting before the period at 15 the end thereof the following: ": And provided further, That

17 established under this Act for a newly constructed project by 18 a public housing agency designed to accommodate a number
19 of families of a given size and kind may be established, as a
20 maximum annual contribution in lieu of any other guaranteed
21 contribution authorized under this section, for a project by 22 such public housing agency which would provide housing
23 for the comparable number, sizes, and kinds of families
24 through the acquisition, acquisition and rehabilitation, or use

1 under lease of existing structures which are suitable for low-
2 rent housing use and obtainable in the local market”.

3 (c) Section 2 (2) of such Act is amended to read as 4 follows:

5 “(2) The term ‘families of low income’ means families
6 (including elderly and displaced families) who are in the
7 lowest income group and who cannot afford to pay enough
8 to cause private enterprise in their locality or metropolitan
9 area to build an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary
10 dwellings for their use. The term ‘families’ includes families
11 consisting of a single person in the case of elderly families
12 and displaced families, and includes the remaining member
13 of a tenant family. The term ‘elderly families’ means families
14 whose heads (or their spouses), or whose sole members, have 15 attained the age at which an individual may elect to receive
16 an old-age benefit under title II of the Social Security Act,
17 or are under a disability as defined in section 223 of that 18 Act, or are handicapped within the meaning of section
19 202 of the Housing Act of 1959. The term ‘displaced fami-
20 lies’ means families displaced by urban renewal or other
21 governmental action.”

22 (d) Section 15 (7) (b) of such Act is amended by strik-
23 ing out “(ii)” and all that follows down through “and 24 (iii)”, and by inserting in lieu thereof “and (ii)”.

1 DIRECT LOANS TO PROVIDE HOUSING FOR THE ELDERLY
2 OR HANDICAPPED

3 SEC. 105. (a) Section 202 (a) (4) of the Housing Act
4 of 1959 is amended by striking out "not to exceed $350,-
5 000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "such sums as may 6 be necessary for purposes of this section,".

7 (b) Effective with respect to loans made on or after 8 the date of the enactment of this Act, section 202 (a) (3) of 9 such Act is amended by striking out "the higher of (A)
10 $2\frac{3}{4}$ per centum per annum, or" and inserting in lieu thereof
11 "the lower of (A) 3 per centum per annum, or".

12 (c) Section 202 (a) of such Act is further amended

“SEC. 1008. The Commissioner shall adopt such requirements as he deems necessary in land development covered by mortgages insured under this title to encourage the maintenance of a diversified local homebuilding industry, broad participation by builders, and the inclusion of a proper balance of housing for families of moderate or low income.

“WATER AND SEWERAGE FACILITIES

“SEC. 1009. After development of the land it shall be served by public systems for water and sewerage which are consistent with other existing or prospective systems within the area. If the Commissioner determines that public ownership of such a system is not feasible, he may approve an adequate privately or cooperatively owned system which will be regulated, during the period of such ownership, in a manner acceptable to him with respect to user rates and charges, capital structure, methods of operation, and rate of return. Approval of such system shall be given only where the Commissioner receives assurances, satisfactory

2 be deemed to refer to such premiums as the Commissioner
3 may designate under this title.

4 "INCONTESTABILITY PROVISIONS

5 "SEC. 1013. Any contract of insurance executed by the
6 Commissioner under this title shall be conclusive evidence of
7 the eligibility of the mortgage for insurance, and the validity

9 able in the hands of an approved mortgagee from the date of 10 the execution of such contract, except for fraud or material

22 to its value, as other real property is taxed.

23 "COST CERTIFICATION

24 "SEC. 1016. (a) The Commissioner shall adopt such re-
25 quirements as he determines necessary to assure, at reason-

1 able intervals of time during land development and upon
2 completion of such development, that the amount of the
3 mortgage loan outstanding at each such interval does not
4 exceed with respect to that portion of the land remaining
5 under the lien of the mortgage (1) 50 per centum of the 6 Commissioner's estimate of the value of such remaining
7 land before development, plus (2) 90 per centum of the 8 actual costs of the development allocated by the Commis-
9 sioner to such remaining land.

24 such Fund.

25 “(e) The General Insurance Fund shall not be used

1 for carrying out the provisions of sections 203 (b) , 203 (h) ,
2 and 203 (i) , or the provisions of section 213 to the extent
3 that they involve mortgages the insurance for which is the 4 obligation of the Cooperative Management Housing Insur-
5 ance Fund created by section 213 (k) ; and nothing in this 6 section shall apply to or affect any mortgages, loans, com-
7 mitments, or insurance under such provisions.”

8 MUTUALITY FOR MANAGEMENT-TYPE COOPERATIVES

9 SEC. 209. (a) Section 213 of the National Housing Act
10 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
11 subsections:

12 “(k) There is hereby created a Cooperative Manage-
13 ment Housing Insurance Fund (hereinafter referred to as 14 the ‘Management Fund’). The Management Fund shall
15 be used by the Commissioner as a revolving fund for carry-
16 ing out the provisions of this section with respect to 17 mortgages or loans insured, on or after the date of the enact-
18 ment of this subsection, under subsections (a) (1) , (a) (3)
19 (if the project is acquired by a cooperative corporation) ,
20 (i) , and (j) . The Management Fund shall also be used as
21 a revolving fund for mortgages, loans, and commitments
22 transferred to it pursuant to subsection (m) . The Commis-
23 sioner is directed to transfer to the Management Fund from
24 the General Insurance Fund established pursuant to section
25 519 such amount as the Commissioner determines to be

1 necessary and appropriate. General expenses of operation
2 of the Federal Housing Administration relating to mort-
3 gages or loans which are the obligation of the Management
4 Fund may be charged to the Management Fund.

5 “(1) The Commissioner shall establish in the Manage-
6 ment Fund, as of the date of the enactment of this subsec-
7 tion, a General Surplus Account and a Participating Reserve
8 Account. The aggregate net income thereafter received or
9 any net loss thereafter sustained by the Management Fund,
10 in any semiannual period, shall be credited or charged to
11 the General Surplus Account or the Participating Reserve
12 Account or both in such manner and amounts as the Com-
13 missioner may determine to be in accord with sound actu-
14 arial and accounting practice. Upon termination of the 15 insurance obligation of the Management Fund by payment
16 of any mortgage or loan insured under this section, and at
17 such time or times prior to such termination as the Commis-
18 sioner may determine, the Commissioner is authorized to
19 distribute to the mortgagor or borrower a share of the Par-
20 ticipating Reserve Account in such manner and amount as
21 the Commissioner shall determine to be equitable and in ac-
22 cordance with sound actuarial and accounting practice: Pro-
23 vided, That in no event shall the amount of the distributable
24 share exceed the aggregate scheduled annual premiums of the 25 mortgagor or borrower to the year of payment of the share

1 less the total amount of any share or shares previously dis-
2 tributed by the Commissioner to the mortgagor or borrower:
3 And provided further, That in no event may a distributable
4 share be distributed until any funds transferred from the Gen-
5 eral Insurance Fund to the Management Fund pursuant to
6 subsection (k) or (o) have been repaid in full to the General
7 Insurance Fund. No mortgagor, mortgagee, borrower, or
8 lender shall have any vested right in a credit balance in any 9 such account or be subject to any liability arising out of the 10 mutuality of the Management Fund. The determination of 11 the Commissioner as to the amount to be paid by him to any
12 mortgagor or borrower shall be final and conclusive.

13 “(m) The Commissioner is authorized to transfer to the 14 Management Fund commitments for insurance issued under 15 subsections (a) (1), (i), and (j) prior to the date of the 16 enactment of this subsection, and to transfer to the Manage-
17 ment Fund the insurance of any mortgage or loan insured
18 prior to the date of the enactment of this subsection under 19 subsection (a) (1), (a) (3) (if the project is acquired by a
20 cooperative corporation), (i), or (j), but only in cases
21 where the consent of the mortgagee or lender to the transfer
22 is obtained or a request by the mortgagee or lender for the
23 transfer is received by the Commissioner within such period
24 of time after the date of the enactment of this subsection as
25 the Commissioner shall prescribe: Provided, That the insur-

1 ance of any mortgage or loan shall not be transferred under
2 the provisions of this subsection if on the date of the enact-
3 ment of this subsection the mortgage or loan is in default and
4 the mortgagee or lender has notified the Commissioner in
5 writing of its intention to file an insurance claim. Any
6 insurance or commitment not so transferred shall continue to
7 be an obligation of the General Insurance Fund.

8 “(n) Notwithstanding the limitations contained in
9 other provisions of this Act, premium charges for mortgages
10 or loans insured under this section and sections 207, 231, and 11 232 may be payable in debentures issued in connection with 12 mortgages or loans transferred to the Management Fund or 13 in connection with mortgages or loans insured pursuant to
14 commitments transferred to the Management Fund, as pro-
15 vided in subsection (m) of this section.

16 “(o) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act,
17 the Commissioner is authorized to transfer funds between 18 the Cooperative Management Housing Insurance Fund and
19 the General Insurance Fund in such amounts and at such 20 times as he may determine, taking into consideration the 21 requirements of each such Fund, to assist in carrying out
22 effectively the insurance programs for which such Funds
23 were respectively established.”

24 (b) Section 213 of such Act is further amended—

25 (1) by inserting before the period at the end of

1 subsection (a) the following: “: Provided, That as ap-
 2 plied to mortgages the mortgage insurance for which is
 3 the obligation of the Management Fund, the reference
 4 to the General Insurance Fund in section 207 (b) (2)
 5 shall be construed to refer to the Management Fund”;
 6 and

7 (2) by inserting before the period at the end of
 8 subsection (e) the following: “: Provided, That as ap-
 9 plied to mortgages or loans the insurance for which is
 10 the obligation of the Management Fund (1) all refer-
 11 ences to the General Insurance Fund shall be construed
 12 to refer to the Management Fund, and (2) all refer-
 13 ences to section 207 shall be construed to refer to sub-
 14 sections (a) (1), (a) (3) (if the project involved is 15 acquired by a cooperative corporation), (i), and (j)
 16 of this section”.

23 “SEC. 520. (a) Notwithstanding any other provisions
 24 of this Act with respect to the payment of insurance benefits,
 25 the Commissioner is authorized, in his discretion, to pay in

1 cash or in debentures any insurance claim or part thereof
2 which is paid on or after the date of the enactment of the
3 Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 on a mort-
4 gage or a loan which was insured under any section of this
5 Act either before or after such date. If payment is made in
6 cash, it shall be in an amount equivalent to the face amount
7 of the debentures that would otherwise be issued plus an
8 amount equivalent to the interest which the debentures would 9 have earned, computed to a date to be established pursuant
10 to regulations issued by the Commissioner.

11 “(b) The Commissioner is authorized to borrow from
12 the Treasury from time to time such amounts as the Com-
13 missioner shall determine are necessary to make payments
14 in cash (in lieu of issuing debentures guaranteed by the 15 United States, as provided in this Act) pursuant to the pro-
16 visions of this section. Notes or other obligations issued
17 by the Commissioner in borrowing under this subsection
18 shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary
19 of the Treasury may prescribe. Each sum borrowed pur-
20 suant to this subsection shall bear interest at a rate deter-
21 mined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consid-
22 eration the average market yield on outstanding marketable
23 obligations of the United States of comparable maturities
24 during the month preceding the issuance of such notes or 25 other obligations.”

6 TITLE III—URBAN RENEWAL

7 STUDY OF HOUSING AND BUILDING CODES, ZONING, TAX
8 POLICIES, AND DEVELOPMENT STANDARDS

9 SEC. 301. (a) The Congress finds that the general wel-
10 fare of the Nation requires that local authorities be encour-
11 aged and aided to prevent slums, blight, and sprawl, pre-
12 serve natural beauty, and provide for decent, durable housing
13 so that the goal of a decent home and a suitable living en-
14 vironment for every American family may be realized as soon
15 as feasible. The Congress further finds that there is a need to 16 study housing and building codes, zoning, tax policies, and 17 development standards in order to determine how (1) local 18 property owners and private enterprise can be encouraged to 19 serve as large a part as they can of the total housing and
20 building need, and (2) Federal, State, and local govern-
21 mental assistance can be so directed as to place greater re-
22 liance on local property owners and private enterprise and

1 enable them to serve a greater share of the total housing and
2 building need. The Housing and Home Finance Adminis-
3 trator is therefore directed to study the structure of (1)
4 State and local urban and suburban housing and building
5 laws, standards, codes, and regulations and their impact on
6 housing and building costs, how they can be simplified, im-
7 proved, and enforced, at the local level, and what methods
8 might be adopted to promote more uniform building codes
9 and the acceptance of technical innovations including new
10 building practices and materials; (2) State and local zoning
11 and land use laws, codes, and regulations, to find ways by 12 which States and localities may improve and utilize them in 13 order to obtain further growth and development; and (3)
14 Federal, State, and local tax policies with respect to their 15 effect on land and property cost and on incentives to build
16 housing and make improvements in existing structures.

17 (b) The Administrator shall submit a report based on
18 such study to the President and to the Congress within 18
19 months after the enactment of the Housing and Urban De-
20 velopment Act of 1965 or the appropriation of funds for the 21 study, whichever is later.

22 (c) There are authorized to be appropriated such funds
23 as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

1 Any funds so appropriated shall remain available until
2 expended.

3 GENERAL NEIGHBORHOOD RENEWAL PLANS

4 SEC. 302. Section 102 (d) of the Housing Act of 1949
5 is amended—

6 (1) by striking out the fifth sentence and inserting
7 in lieu thereof the following:

8 “In order to facilitate proper preliminary planning for
9 the attainment of the urban renewal objectives of this title,
10 the Administrator may also make advances of funds (in addi-
11 tion to those authorized above) to local public agencies for 12 the preparation of General Neighborhood Renewal Plans (as 13 herein defined). A General Neighborhood Renewal Plan
14 may be prepared for an area which consists of an urban re-
15 newal area or areas together with any adjoining areas, and 16 which is of such size that the urban renewal activities in the 17 urban renewal area or areas may have to be carried out in 18 stages, consistent with the capacity and resources of the 19 respective local public agency or agencies, over an estimated
20 period of not more than ten years.”; and

21 (2) by striking out clause (1) of the sixth sentence
22 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

23 “(1) in the interest of sound community planning,

1 it is desirable that the urban renewal activities proposed
2 for the area be planned in their entirety;”.

3 INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION FOR CAPITAL GRANTS

4 SEC. 303. (a) The first sentence of section 103 (b) of
5 the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking out
6 “$4,725,000,000” and inserting in lieu thereof “$4,700,-
7 000,000, which amount shall be increased by $675,000,000
8 on the date of the enactment of the Housing and Urban
9 Development Act of 1965, by $725,000,000 on July 1,
10 1966, and by $750,000,000 on July 1 in each of the years
11 1967 and 1968”.

12 (b) The proviso in the first sentence of section 103 (b)
13 of such Act, and the second sentence of section 6 (b) of 14 the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, are repealed.

15 USE OF GRANT OR LOAN FUNDS IN CODE ENFORCEMENT

21 (2) by inserting before the period at the end of the 22 paragraph the following: “, and (B) not less than 10
23 per centum of the aggregate amount of (i) grants
24 authorized to be contracted for under this title by the
25 Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 and sub-

1 sequent Acts, and (ii) loans authorized to be made
2 under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964, shall be
3 available for projects assisted with such grants or loans
4 which involve primarily code enforcement and reha-
5 bilitation”.

6 STRENGTHENED WORKABLE PROGRAM REQUIREMENT

7 SEC. 305. Section 101 of the Housing Act of 1949 is
8 amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
9 subsection:

10 “(e) No loan or grant contract may be entered into 11 by the Administrator for an urban renewal project unless
12 he determines that (A) the workable program for com-
13 munity improvement presented by the locality pursuant to 14 subsection (c) is of sufficient scope and content to furnish a
15 basis for evaluation of the need for the urban renewal project;
16 and (B) such project is in accord with the program.”

17 REHABILITATION LOANS

18 SEC. 306. (a) Section 312(d) of the Housing Act of
19 1964 is amended to read as follows:

20 “(d) In order to provide moneys for loans in accord-
21 ance with this section, the Administrator is authorized to
22 establish a revolving fund which shall comprise all moneys
23 heretofore or hereafter appropriated pursuant to this
24 section, together with all repayments and other receipts

1 heretofore or hereafter received in connection with loans
2 made under this section. There are authorized to be
3 appropriated to such revolving fund, in addition to amounts
4 authorized for the purposes of this section prior to the date
5 of the enactment of the Housing and Urban Development
6 Act of 1965, such funds as may be necessary to carry out
7 the purposes of this section. All funds so appropriated shall
8 remain available until expended.”

9 (b) Section 312 of such Act is further amended by
10 adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

11 “(h) No loan shall be made under the authority of this
12 section after October 1, 1969, except pursuant to a contract,
13 commitment, or other obligation entered into pursuant to 14 this section before that date.”

16 DISPLACED BY URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

17 SEC. 307. (a) Section 7 of the Small Business Act is
18 amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
19 subsection:

20 “(e) (1) The Administration also is empowered, in
21 order to assist small-business concerns which have been dis-
22 placed by urban renewal projects in obtaining leases of 23 property for use in the conduct of their business operations,
24 to insure the owner or lessor of any such property, or the 25 lending institution financing the construction thereof, against

1 losses which such owner, lessor, or institution might sustain
2 as a result of the failure of the small-business concern to
3 perform the lease in accordance with its terms.

4 “(2) No insurance under this subsection shall be granted
5 by the Administration with respect to any lease unless—

6 “(A) the lease is for a period of not more than 7 ten years and contains or is subject to such other terms
8 and conditions as the Administration may require in
9 order to protect the interests of the small-business con-
10 cern and to insure that the lease will assist in carrying
11 out the purpose of this Act; and

12 “(B) the small-business concern is financially sound
13 and efficiently managed, and has provided satisfactory
14 assurances that it will comply with the terms of the lease
15 and any related documents and with such additional

17 “(3) There is hereby established an insurance fund for
18 use by the Administration in carrying out this subsection.
19 Each person granted insurance under this subsection shall be
20 required to pay premiums for such insurance, at such times
21 and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Administra-
22 tion, in amounts which shall be fixed by the Administration
23 but which shall not exceed, in the case of any lease, an 24 amount equivalent to 1 per centum of the annual rental (or 25 minimum rental) payable under such lease. Such premiums,

1 together with any other receipts under the insurance program
2 established by this subsection, shall be placed in the insurance
3 fund. Moneys in such fund not needed for the payment of 4 current operating expenses of the insurance program or for
5 the payment of claims arising thereunder may be invested in
6 bonds or other obligations of, or bonds or other obligations
7 guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States;
8 except that moneys made available to provide initial capital
9 for such fund under the sixth sentence of section 4 (c) shall
10 be returned to the revolving fund established by such section,
11 in such amounts and at such times as the Administration
12 determines to be appropriate, whenever the level of such 13 insurance fund (by reason of premiums and receipts from 14 other sources) is sufficiently high to permit the return of 15 such moneys without danger to the solvency of the insurance
16 program under this subsection.

17 “(4) The Administration is authorized and directed
18 to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary
19 to carry out this subsection.”

13 AREAS

15 1949 is amended to read as follows:

16 “(c) There shall be a feasible method for the tem-

23 urban renewal area, decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings
24 equal in number to the number of and available to such dis-

2 to their places of employment. The Administrator shall
3 issue rules and regulations to aid in implementing the
4 requirements of this subsection and in otherwise achiev-
5 ing the objectives of this title. Such rules and regula-
6 tions shall require that there be established, at the earli-

8 volving the displacement of individuals, families, and
9 business concerns occupying property in the urban
10 renewal area, a relocation assistance program which shall 11 include such measures, facilities, and services as may be 12 necessary or appropriate in order (A) to determine the 13 needs of such individuals, families, and business concerns
14 for relocation assistance; (B) to provide information and 15 assistance to aid in relocation and otherwise minimize the 16 hardships of displacement, including information as to real
17 estate agencies, brokers, and boards in or near the urban
18 renewal area which deal in residential or business property
19 that might be appropriate for the relocating of displaced
20 individuals, families, and business concerns; and (C) to
21 assure the necessary coordination of relocation activities
22 with other project activities and other planned or proposed
23 governmental actions in the community which may affect 24 the carrying out of the relocation program, particularly
25 planned or proposed low-rent housing projects to be con-

1 structed in or near the urban renewal area. As a condition
2 to further assistance after the enactment of this sentence with
3 respect to each urban renewal project involving the displace-
4 ment of individuals and families, the Administrator shall
5 require, within a reasonable time prior to actual displacement,
6 satisfactory assurance by the local public agency that decent,
7 safe, and sanitary dwellings as required by the first sentence
8 of this subsection are available for the relocation of each such
9 individual or family.”

(b) The requirements imposed by the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall not be applicable to any project receiving Federal recognition prior to the date of the enactment of this Act.

22 public agency establishes, by evidence satisfactory to the 23 Administrator, that any urban renewal project with respect
24 to which such local public agency has received a loan or 25 capital grant under this title has been, or will be, undertaken

13 mines that the project is necessary to provide adequate
14 water or sewer facilities for, and will contribute to the im-

11 as those terms are defined herein, in such amounts and under 12 such circumstances as are prescribed in or pursuant to this
13 section. In no case shall a contract provide for such pay-

8 (c) As used in this section, the term “qualified tenant”
 9 means any individual or family who has, pursuant to criteria
 10 and procedures established by the Administrator, been de-

 22 of a family, to have a head who is, or whose spouse
 23 is, physically handicapped) ; or

24 (D) occupying substandard housing.

25 (d) The amount of the annual payment with respect to

19 shall provide for recertifications of the incomes of occupants,
20 except the elderly, at intervals of two years (or at shorter
21 intervals in cases where the Administrator may deem it
22 desirable) for the purpose of adjusting rental charges and
23 annual payments on the basis of occupants' incomes, but in 24 no event shall rental charges adjusted under this section for
25 any dwelling exceed the fair market rental of the dwelling.

1 (3) The Administrator may enter into agreements, or
2 authorize housing owners to enter into agreements, with
3 public or private agencies for services required in the selec-

6 in their incomes, as lessees under an option to purchase
7 dwellings or cooperative ownership interests therein, and

9 authorized (without limiting his authority under any other
10 provision of law) to delegate to any such public or private

3 unless there is a workable program for community improve-
4 ment which meets the requirements of this subsection in
5 effect in such community at the time of such insurance or
6 commitment”.

7 (g) The Administrator is authorized to make such rules
8 and regulations, to enter into such agreements, and to adopt
9 such procedures as he may deem necessary or desirable to
10 carry out the provisions of this section. Nothing contained
11 in this section shall affect the authority of the Federal Hous-

12 LOW-RENT HOUSING IN PRIVATE ACCOMMODATIONS

13 SEC. 103. (a) The United States Housing Act of 1937
14 is amended by redesignating section 23 as section 24, and by
15 adding after section 22 the following new section:

16 “LOW-RENT HOUSING IN PRIVATE ACCOMMODATIONS

17 “SEC. 23. (a) For the purpose of providing a supple-
18 mentary form of low-rent housing which will aid in assuring
19 a decent place to live for every citizen and promote efficiency
20 and economy in the program under this Act by taking full
21 advantage of vacancies or potential vacancies in the private 22 housing market, each public housing agency shall, to the 23 maximum extent consistent with the achievement of the 24 objectives of this Act, provide low-rent housing under this
25 Act in the form of low-rent housing in private accommoda-

1 tions in accordance with this section where such housing in
2 private accommodations can be provided at a cost equal to or
3 less than housing in projects assisted under other provisions
4 of this Act. As used in this section the term 'low-rent hous-
5 ing in private accommodations' means dwelling units in an
6 existing structure, leased from a private owner, which provide
7 decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations and
8 related facilities effectively supplementing the accommoda-
9 tions and facilities in low-rent housing assisted under the
10 other provisions of this Act in a manner calculated to meet
11 the total housing needs of the community in which they are
12 located. As used in this section, the term 'owner' means
13 any person or entity having the legal right to lease or sub-
14 lease property containing one or more dwelling units as
15 described in this section.

16 “(b) Beginning as soon as practicable after the date of 17 the enactment of this section, each public housing agency
18 shall conduct a continuing survey and listing of the available
19 dwelling units within the community or communities under 20 its jurisdiction which provide decent, safe, and sanitary
21 dwelling accommodations and related facilities and are, or
22 may be made, suitable for use as low-rent housing in private
23 accommodations under this section.

24 “(c) Each public housing agency, by notification to 25 the owners of housing listed under subsection (b), or by

1 publication or advertisement, or otherwise, shall from time
2 to time make known to the public in the community or com-
3 munities under its jurisdiction the anticipated need for dwell-
4 ing units in such community or communities to be used as
5 low-rent housing in private accommodations under this sec-
6 tion, inviting the owners of such dwelling units to make
7 available for purposes of this section one or more of such
8 units (not exceeding 10 per centum of the units in any single 9 structure except to the extent that the agency, because of
10 the limited number of units in the structure or for any other
11 reason, determines that such limit should not be applied).
12 The public housing agency shall conduct appropriate inspec-
13 tions of the units offered to be made available in any 14 residential structure by the owner thereof in response to 15 such invitation, and if—

16 “(1) it finds that such units are, or may be made,
17 suitable for use as low-rent housing in private accom-
18 modations within the meaning of subsection (a), and

19 “(2) the rentals to be charged for such units, as 20 negotiated and agreed to by the agency and the owner
21 of the structure in a manner consistent with subsection
22 (d) (2), are within the financial range of families of
23 low income,

24 such agency may approve such units for use as low-rent
25 housing in private accommodations in accordance with (and

1 subject to the applicable limitations contained in) this sec-
2 tion. Each public housing agency shall maintain and keep
3 current a list of units approved by it under this subsection,
4 including such information with respect to each such unit
5 as it may consider necessary or appropriate.

6 “(d) To the extent of contracts for annual contributions
7 entered into by the Authority with a public housing agency
8 under section 10 (e), such agency may enter into contracts
9 with the owners of structures containing dwelling units ap-
10 proved under subsection (c) for the use of such units in 11 accordance with this section. Each such contract with an
12 owner shall provide (with respect to any unit) that—

13 “(1) the selection of tenants for such unit shall be 14 the function of the owner, subject to the provisions of 15 the contract between the Authority and the agency;

16 “(2) the rental and other charges to be received by
17 the owner shall be negotiated and agreed to by the 18 agency and the owner, and the rental and other charges
19 to be paid by the tenant shall be determined in accord-
20 ance with the standards applicable to units in low-rent
21 housing projects assisted under the other provisions of 22 this Act;

23 “(3) the agency shall have the sole right to give
24 notice to vacate, with the owner having the right to

1 make representations to the agency for termination of
2 a tenancy;

3 “(4) maintenance and replacements (including
4 redecoration) shall be in accordance with the standard
5 practice for the building concerned, as established by
6 the owner and agreed to by the agency; and

7 “(5) the agency and the owner shall carry out such
8 other appropriate terms and conditions as may be
9 mutually agreed to by them.

10 Each contract between a public housing agency and an 11 owner entered into under this subsection shall be for a term
12 of not less than twelve months nor more than thirty-six
13 months, and shall be renewable by such agency and owner
14 at the expiration of such term.

15 “(e) The annual contribution under this Act for a proj-
16 ect of a public housing agency for low-rent housing in private
17 accommodations under this section in lieu of any other guar-
18 anteed contribution authorized by section 10 shall not exceed
19 the amount of the fixed annual contribution which would be
20 established under this Act for a newly constructed project
21 by such public housing agency designed to accommodate the
22 comparable number, sizes, and kinds of families. The
23 period over which payments will be made to a public hous-
24 ing agency for a project of low-rent housing in private
25 accommodations under this section, and the aggregate

1 amount of such payments, under a contract for annual
2 contributions, shall be determined on the basis of the number
3 of units in the community or communities under the juris-
4 diction of such agency which are in use (or can reasonably
5 be expected to be placed in use) as low-rent housing in
6 private accommodations under this section, taking into ac-
7 count the terms of the leases under which such units are (or
8 will be) so used. In addition, contracts for financial assist-
9 ance entered into by the Authority with a public housing
10 agency pursuant to this section shall provide for reimburse-
11 ment of reasonable and necessary expenses incurred by such
12 agency in conducting surveys, listings, and inspections de-
13 scribed in subsections (b) and (c).

14 “(f) On or before January 1, 1968, the Authority shall
15 submit to the Congress a full report of operations under this
17 thereto.”

18 (b) The last sentence of section 2(1) of such Act is 19 amended by striking out “Income limits for occupancy and
20 rents” and inserting in lieu thereof “Except as otherwise pro-
21 vided in section 23, income limits for occupancy and rents”.

22 (c) The provisions of sections 10(h) and 15(7) of the 23 United States Housing Act of 1937, and the workable pro-
24 gram requirement in section 10(e) of such Act and section

10 with the objectives of sound and economic community growth
11 or urban development.

12 "(b) The land development shall be undertaken in

15 “SEC. 1009. After development of the land it shall be
16 served by public systems for water and sewerage which are
17 consistent with other existing or prospective systems within 18 the area. If the Commissioner determines that public own-
19 ership of such a system is not feasible, he may approve an 20 adequate privately or cooperatively owned system which 21 will be regulated, during the period of such ownership, in 22 a manner acceptable to him with respect to user rates and
23 charges, capital structure, methods of operation, and rate
24 of return. Approval of such system shall be given only
25 where the Commissioner receives assurances, satisfactory

21 "SEC. 1012. The provisions of subsections (e), (g),
22 (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), and (n) of section 207 of this
23 Act shall be applicable to mortgages insured under this 24 title, except that as applied to such mortgages (1) any

3 may designate under this title.

4 "INCONTESTABILITY PROVISIONS

6 Commissioner under this title shall be conclusive evidence of
7 the eligibility of the mortgage for insurance, and the validity
8 of any contract of insurance so executed shall be incontest-
9 able in the hands of an approved mortgagee from the date of
10 the execution of such contract, except for fraud or material
11 misrepresentation on the part of such approved mortgagee.

12 "RULES AND REGULATIONS

13 "SEC. 1014. The Commissioner is authorized to make
14 such rules and regulations and to require such agreements
15 as he may deem necessary or desirable to carry out the pro-
16 visions of this title.

17 "TAXATION PROVISIONS

18 "SEC. 1015. Nothing in this title shall be construed to

22 to its value, as other real property is taxed.

23 "COST CERTIFICATION

24 "SEC. 1016. (a) The Commissioner shall adopt such re-
25 quirements as he determines necessary to assure, at reason-

1 able intervals of time during land development and upon
2 completion of such development, that the amount of the
3 mortgage loan outstanding at each such interval does not
4 exceed with respect to that portion of the land remaining
5 under the lien of the mortgage (1) 50 per centum of the 6 Commissioner's estimate of the value of such remaining
7 land before development, plus (2) 90 per centum of the 8 actual costs of the development allocated by the Commis-
9 sioner to such remaining land.

10 “(b) From time to time during, and upon completion
11 of, the development, the Commissioner shall require the

21 means the costs (exclusive of kickbacks, rebates, or trade
22 discounts) to the mortgagor of the improvements involved.
23 These costs may include amounts paid for labor, materials,
24 construction contracts, land planning, engineers' and archi-
25 tects' fees, surveys, taxes, and interest during development,

8 reasonable by the Commissioner."

8 MUTUALITY FOR MANAGEMENT-TYPE COOPERATIVES

9 SEC. 209. (a) Section 213 of the National Housing Act
10 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
11 subsections:

12 “(k) There is hereby created a Cooperative Manage-
13 ment Housing Insurance Fund (hereinafter referred to as 14 the ‘Management Fund’). The Management Fund shall
15 be used by the Commissioner as a revolving fund for carry-
16 ing out the provisions of this section with respect to 17 mortgages or loans insured, on or after the date of the enact-
18 ment of this subsection, under subsections (a) (1) , (a) (3)
19 (if the project is acquired by a cooperative corporation) ,
20 (i) , and (j) . The Management Fund shall also be used as
21 a revolving fund for mortgages, loans, and commitments
22 transferred to it pursuant to subsection (m) . The Commis-
23 sioner is directed to transfer to the Management Fund from
24 the General Insurance Fund established pursuant to section
25 519 such amount as the Commissioner determines to be

1 necessary and appropriate. General expenses of operation
2 of the Federal Housing Administration relating to mort-
3 gages or loans which are the obligation of the Management
4 Fund may be charged to the Management Fund.

5 “(1) The Commissioner shall establish in the Manage-
6 ment Fund, as of the date of the enactment of this subsec-
7 tion, a General Surplus Account and a Participating Reserve
8 Account. The aggregate net income thereafter received or
9 any net loss thereafter sustained by the Management Fund,
10 in any semiannual period, shall be credited or charged to
11 the General Surplus Account or the Participating Reserve
12 Account or both in such manner and amounts as the Com-
13 missioner may determine to be in accord with sound actu-
14 arial and accounting practice. Upon termination of the 15 insurance obligation of the Management Fund by payment
16 of any mortgage or loan insured under this section, and at
17 such time or times prior to such termination as the Commis-
18 sioner may determine, the Commissioner is authorized to
19 distribute to the mortgagor or borrower a share of the Par-
20 ticipating Reserve Account in such manner and amount as
21 the Commissioner shall determine to be equitable and in ac-
22 cordance with sound actuarial and accounting practice: Pro-
23 vided, That in no event shall the amount of the distributable
24 share exceed the aggregate scheduled annual premiums of the 25 mortgagor or borrower to the year of payment of the share

1 less the total amount of any share or shares previously dis-
2 tributed by the Commissioner to the mortgagor or borrower:
3 And provided further, That in no event may a distributable
4 share be distributed until any funds transferred from the Gen-
5 eral Insurance Fund to the Management Fund pursuant to
6 subsection (k) or (o) have been repaid in full to the General
7 Insurance Fund. No mortgagor, mortgagee, borrower, or
8 lender shall have any vested right in a credit balance in any 9 such account or be subject to any liability arising out of the 10 mutuality of the Management Fund. The determination of 11 the Commissioner as to the amount to be paid by him to any
12 mortgagor or borrower shall be final and conclusive.

13 “(m) The Commissioner is authorized to transfer to the 14 Management Fund commitments for insurance issued under 15 subsections (a) (1), (i), and (j) prior to the date of the 16 enactment of this subsection, and to transfer to the Manage-
17 ment Fund the insurance of any mortgage or loan insured
18 prior to the date of the enactment of this subsection under 19 subsection (a) (1), (a) (3) (if the project is acquired by a
20 cooperative corporation), (i), or (j), but only in cases
21 where the consent of the mortgagee or lender to the transfer
22 is obtained or a request by the mortgagee or lender for the
23 transfer is received by the Commissioner within such period
24 of time after the date of the enactment of this subsection as
25 the Commissioner shall prescribe: Provided, That the insur-

1 ance of any mortgage or loan shall not be transferred under
2 the provisions of this subsection if on the date of the enact-
3 ment of this subsection the mortgage or loan is in default and
4 the mortgagee or lender has notified the Commissioner in
5 writing of its intention to file an insurance claim. Any
6 insurance or commitment not so transferred shall continue to
7 be an obligation of the General Insurance Fund.

8 “(n) Notwithstanding the limitations contained in
9 other provisions of this Act, premium charges for mortgages
10 or loans insured under this section and sections 207, 231, and 11 232 may be payable in debentures issued in connection with 12 mortgages or loans transferred to the Management Fund or 13 in connection with mortgages or loans insured pursuant to
14 commitments transferred to the Management Fund, as pro-
15 vided in subsection (m) of this section.

16 “(o) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act,
17 the Commissioner is authorized to transfer funds between
18 the Cooperative Management Housing Insurance Fund and
19 the General Insurance Fund in such amounts and at such 20 times as he may determine, taking into consideration the
21 requirements of each such Fund, to assist in carrying out
22 effectively the insurance programs for which such Funds
23 were respectively established.”

24 (b) Section 213 of such Act is further amended—

25 (1) by inserting before the period at the end of

1 subsection (a) the following: “: Provided, That as ap-
2 plied to mortgages the mortgage insurance for which is
3 the obligation of the Management Fund, the reference
4 to the General Insurance Fund in section 207 (b) (2)
5 shall be construed to refer to the Management Fund”;
6 and

7 (2) by inserting before the period at the end of
8 subsection (e) the following: “: Provided, That as ap-
9 plied to mortgages or loans the insurance for which is
10 the obligation of the Management Fund (1) all refer-
11 ences to the General Insurance Fund shall be construed
12 to refer to the Management Fund, and (2) all refer-
13 ences to section 207 shall be construed to refer to sub-
14 sections (a) (1), (a) (3) (if the project involved is 15 acquired by a cooperative corporation), (i), and (j)
16 of this section”.

17 OPTIONAL CASH PAYMENT OF INSURANCE BENEFITS

19 amended by adding at the end thereof (after the new sec-20 tion added by section 208 of this Act) the following new 21 section:

22 “OPTIONAL CASH PAYMENT OF INSURANCE BENEFITS

23 “SEC. 520. (a) Notwithstanding any other provisions
24 of this Act with respect to the payment of insurance benefits,
25 the Commissioner is authorized, in his discretion, to pay in

1 cash or in debentures any insurance claim or part thereof
2 which is paid on or after the date of the enactment of the
3 Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 on a mort-
4 gage or a loan which was insured under any section of this
5 Act either before or after such date. If payment is made in
6 cash, it shall be in an amount equivalent to the face amount
7 of the debentures that would otherwise be issued plus an
8 amount equivalent to the interest which the debentures would 9 have earned, computed to a date to be established pursuant
10 to regulations issued by the Commissioner.

11 “(b) The Commissioner is authorized to borrow from
12 the Treasury from time to time such amounts as the Com-
13 missioner shall determine are necessary to make payments
14 in cash (in lieu of issuing debentures guaranteed by the 15 United States, as provided in this Act) pursuant to the pro-
16 visions of this section. Notes or other obligations issued
17 by the Commissioner in borrowing under this subsection
18 shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary
19 of the Treasury may prescribe. Each sum borrowed pur-
20 suant to this subsection shall bear interest at a rate deter-
21 mined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consid-
22 eration the average market yield on outstanding marketable
23 obligations of the United States of comparable maturities
24 during the month preceding the issuance of such notes or
25 other obligations.”

14 owned and occupied by him as his home, and the mort-

6 TITLE III—URBAN RENEWAL

7 STUDY OF HOUSING AND BUILDING CODES, ZONING, TAX

8 POLICIES, AND DEVELOPMENT STANDARDS

9 SEC. 301. (a) The Congress finds that the general wel-
10 fare of the Nation requires that local authorities be encour-
11 aged and aided to prevent slums, blight, and sprawl, pre-
12 serve natural beauty, and provide for decent, durable housing
13 so that the goal of a decent home and a suitable living en-
14 vironment for every American family may be realized as soon
15 as feasible. The Congress further finds that there is a need to 16 study housing and building codes, zoning, tax policies, and
17 development standards in order to determine how (1) local 18 property owners and private enterprise can be encouraged to 19 serve as large a part as they can of the total housing and
20 building need, and (2) Federal, State, and local govern-
21 mental assistance can be so directed as to place greater re-
22 liance on local property owners and private enterprise and

1 enable them to serve a greater share of the total housing and
2 building need. The Housing and Home Finance Adminis-
3 trator is therefore directed to study the structure of (1)
4 State and local urban and suburban housing and building
5 laws, standards, codes, and regulations and their impact on
6 housing and building costs, how they can be simplified, im-
7 proved, and enforced, at the local level, and what methods
8 might be adopted to promote more uniform building codes
9 and the acceptance of technical innovations including new
10 building practices and materials; (2) State and local zoning
11 and land use laws, codes, and regulations, to find ways by 12 which States and localities may improve and utilize them in 13 order to obtain further growth and development; and (3)
14 Federal, State, and local tax policies with respect to their
15 effect on land and property cost and on incentives to build
16 housing and make improvements in existing structures.

17 (b) The Administrator shall submit a report based on
18 such study to the President and to the Congress within 18
19 months after the enactment of the Housing and Urban De-
20 velopment Act of 1965 or the appropriation of funds for the 21 study, whichever is later.

22 (c) There are authorized to be appropriated such funds
23 as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

1 Any funds so appropriated shall remain available until
2 expended.

3 GENERAL NEIGHBORHOOD RENEWAL PLANS

4 SEC. 302. Section 102 (d) of the Housing Act of 1949
5 is amended—

6 (1) by striking out the fifth sentence and inserting
7 in lieu thereof the following:

8 “In order to facilitate proper preliminary planning for
9 the attainment of the urban renewal objectives of this title,
10 the Administrator may also make advances of funds (in addi-
11 tion to those authorized above) to local public agencies for 12 the preparation of General Neighborhood Renewal Plans (as 13 herein defined). A General Neighborhood Renewal Plan
14 may be prepared for an area which consists of an urban re-
15 newal area or areas together with any adjoining areas, and 16 which is of such size that the urban renewal activities in the 17 urban renewal area or areas may have to be carried out in 18 stages, consistent with the capacity and resources of the 19 respective local public agency or agencies, over an estimated
20 period of not more than ten years.”; and

21 (2) by striking out clause (1) of the sixth sentence
22 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

23 “(1) in the interest of sound community planning,

1 it is desirable that the urban renewal activities proposed
2 for the area be planned in their entirety;”.

3 INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION FOR CAPITAL GRANTS

4 SEC. 303. (a) The first sentence of section 103 (b) of
5 the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking out
6 “$4,725,000,000” and inserting in lieu thereof “$4,700,-
7 000,000, which amount shall be increased by $675,000,000
8 on the date of the enactment of the Housing and Urban
9 Development Act of 1965, by $725,000,000 on July 1,
10 1966, and by $750,000,000 on July 1 in each of the years
11 1967 and 1968”.

12 (b) The proviso in the first sentence of section 103 (b)
13 of such Act, and the second sentence of section 6 (b) of 14 the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, are repealed.

15 USE OF GRANT OR LOAN FUNDS IN CODE ENFORCEMENT
16 AND REHABILITATION PROJECTS

17 SEC. 304. The unnumbered paragraph immediately fol-
18 lowing clause (8) in section 110 (c) of the Housing Act
19 of 1949 is amended—

20 (1) by inserting “(A)” before “no contract”; and

21 (2) by inserting before the period at the end of the 22 paragraph the following: “, and (B) not less than 10
23 per centum of the aggregate amount of (i) grants
24 authorized to be contracted for under this title by the
25 Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 and sub-

1 sequent Acts, and (ii) loans authorized to be made
2 under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964, shall be
3 available for projects assisted with such grants or loans
4 which involve primarily code enforcement and reha-
5 bilitation”.

6 STRENGTHENED WORKABLE PROGRAM REQUIREMENT

7 SEC. 305. Section 101 of the Housing Act of 1949 is
8 amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
9 subsection:

10 “(e) No loan or grant contract may be entered into
11 by the Administrator for an urban renewal project unless
12 he determines that (A) the workable program for com-
13 munity improvement presented by the locality pursuant to
14 subsection (c) is of sufficient scope and content to furnish a
15 basis for evaluation of the need for the urban renewal project;
16 and (B) such project is in accord with the program.”

17 REHABILITATION LOANS

18 SEC. 306. (a) Section 312 (d) of the Housing Act of
19 1964 is amended to read as follows:

20 “(d) In order to provide moneys for loans in accord-
21 ance with this section, the Administrator is authorized to
22 establish a revolving fund which shall comprise all moneys
23 heretofore or hereafter appropriated pursuant to this
24 section, together with all repayments and other receipts

1 heretofore or hereafter received in connection with loans
2 made under this section. There are authorized to be
3 appropriated to such revolving fund, in addition to amounts
4 authorized for the purposes of this section prior to the date
5 of the enactment of the Housing and Urban Development
6 Act of 1965, such funds as may be necessary to carry out
7 the purposes of this section. All funds so appropriated shall
8 remain available until expended.”

9 (b) Section 312 of such Act is further amended by
10 adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

11 “(h) No loan shall be made under the authority of this
12 section after October 1, 1969, except pursuant to a contract,
13 commitment, or other obligation entered into pursuant to 14 this section before that date.”

15 LEASE GUARANTIES FOR SMALL-BUSINESS CONCERNS

16 DISPLACED BY URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

17 SEC. 307. (a) Section 7 of the Small Business Act is
18 amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
19 subsection:

20 “(e) (1) The Administration also is empowered, in
21 order to assist small-business concerns which have been dis-
22 placed by urban renewal projects in obtaining leases of 23 property for use in the conduct of their business operations,
24 to insure the owner or lessor of any such property, or the
25 lending institution financing the construction thereof, against

1 losses which such owner, lessor, or institution might sustain
2 as a result of the failure of the small-business concern to
3 perform the lease in accordance with its terms.

4 “(2) No insurance under this subsection shall be granted
5 by the Administration with respect to any lease unless—

6 “(A) the lease is for a period of not more than 7 ten years and contains or is subject to such other terms
8 and conditions as the Administration may require in
9 order to protect the interests of the small-business con-
10 cern and to insure that the lease will assist in carrying
11 out the purpose of this Act; and

12 “(B) the small-business concern is financially sound
13 and efficiently managed, and has provided satisfactory
14 assurances that it will comply with the terms of the lease
15 and any related documents and with such additional
16 terms and conditions as the Administration may specify.

17 “(3) There is hereby established an insurance fund for
18 use by the Administration in carrying out this subsection.
19 Each person granted insurance under this subsection shall be
20 required to pay premiums for such insurance, at such times
21 and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Administra-
22 tion, in amounts which shall be fixed by the Administration
23 but which shall not exceed, in the case of any lease, an 24 amount equivalent to 1 per centum of the annual rental (or 25 minimum rental) payable under such lease. Such premiums,

1 together with any other receipts under the insurance program
2 established by this subsection, shall be placed in the insurance
3 fund. Moneys in such fund not needed for the payment of
4 current operating expenses of the insurance program or for
5 the payment of claims arising thereunder may be invested in
6 bonds or other obligations of, or bonds or other obligations
7 guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States;
8 except that moneys made available to provide initial capital
9 for such fund under the sixth sentence of section 4 (c) shall
10 be returned to the revolving fund established by such section,
11 in such amounts and at such times as the Administration
12 determines to be appropriate, whenever the level of such 13 insurance fund (by reason of premiums and receipts from 14 other sources) is sufficiently high to permit the return of 15 such moneys without danger to the solvency of the insurance
16 program under this subsection.

17 “(4) The Administration is authorized and directed
18 to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary
19 to carry out this subsection.”

20 (b) Section 4 (c) of such Act is amended—

21 (1) by inserting “7 (e),” after “7 (b),” in the first 22 sentence; and

23 (2) by inserting after the fifth sentence the fol-

11 and inserting in lieu thereof “, 7 (b), and 7 (e)”.

12 RELOCATION OF DISPLACEES FROM URBAN RENEWAL

13 AREAS

14 SEC. 308. (a) Section 105 (c) of the Housing Act of 15 1949 is amended to read as follows:

16 “(c) There shall be a feasible method for the tem-
17 porary relocation of individuals and families displaced from 18 the urban renewal area, and there are or are being provided,
19 in the urban renewal area or in other areas not generally
20 less desirable in regard to public utilities and public and com-
21 mercial facilities and at rents or prices within the financial 22 means of the individuals and families displaced from the 23 urban renewal area, decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings
24 equal in number to the number of and available to such dis-

1 placed individuals and families and reasonably accessible
2 to their places of employment. The Administrator shall
3 issue rules and regulations to aid in implementing the
4 requirements of this subsection and in otherwise achiev-
5 ing the objectives of this title. Such rules and regula-
6 tions shall require that there be established, at the earli-
7 est practicable time, for each urban renewal project in-
8 volving the displacement of individuals, families, and
9 business concerns occupying property in the urban
10 renewal area, a relocation assistance program which shall
11 include such measures, facilities, and services as may be 12 necessary or appropriate in order (A) to determine the 13 needs of such individuals, families, and business concerns
14 for relocation assistance; (B) to provide information and
15 assistance to aid in relocation and otherwise minimize the 16 hardships of displacement, including information as to real
17 estate agencies, brokers, and boards in or near the urban
18 renewal area which deal in residential or business property
19 that might be appropriate for the relocating of displaced
20 individuals, families, and business concerns; and (C) to
21 assure the necessary coordination of relocation activities
22 with other project activities and other planned or proposed
23 governmental actions in the community which may affect 24 the carrying out of the relocation program, particularly
25 planned or proposed low-rent housing projects to be con-

1 structed in or near the urban renewal area. As a condition
2 to further assistance after the enactment of this sentence with
3 respect to each urban renewal project involving the displace-
4 ment of individuals and families, the Administrator shall
5 require, within a reasonable time prior to actual displacement,
6 satisfactory assurance by the local public agency that decent,
7 safe, and sanitary dwellings as required by the first sentence
8 of this subsection are available for the relocation of each such
9 individual or family.”

(b) The requirements imposed by the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall not be applicable to any project receiving Federal recognition prior to the date of the enactment of this Act.

6 “(j) The Secretary may also utilize the Fund—

7 “(1) to pay amounts to which the holder of a
8 note is entitled in accordance with an insurance or sale
9 agreement under this section accruing between the date
10 of any prepayment by the borrower to the Secretary and

A BILL

To assist in the provision of housing for low- and moderate-income families, to promote orderly urban development, to improve living environment in urban areas, and to extend and amend laws relating to housing, urban renewal, and community facilities.

By Mr. DOUGLAS

MAY 11 (legislative day, MAY 10), 1965

Read twice and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

ing persons. It is this decision which motivates the amendment to the act of 1940 herein.

As the law now stands, if an employee of this Agency should serve 2 years in Alaska or Hawaii, this Agency would be obligated by statute and contract to return the employee, his dependents, and his effects to his place of residence in one of the other 49 States. However, should the same employee die after completion of 2 years service in Alaska or Hawaii but before commencing travel to his place of residence, the Agency could not return his remains, although we could return his dependents and his household effects. Finally, and to complete the inconsistency, if a dependent of an employee dies at any time during the employee's service in Alaska or Hawaii, the Agency may return the dependent's remains. For these reasons, we earnestly recommend Congress early and favorable consideration of this corrective legislation.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the administration's program to the submission of the proposed legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely,

HAROLD W. GRANT,
Lieutenant General, USAF,
Deputy Administrator.

ALTERATION, MAINTENANCE, AND REPAIR OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS AND PROPERTY

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, by request of the Administrator, Federal Aviation Agency, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to provide for the alteration, maintenance, and repair of Government buildings and property under lease or concession contracts entered into pursuant to the operation and maintenance of Government-owned airports under the jurisdiction of the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the Administrator be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1941) to provide for the alteration, maintenance, and repair of Government buildings and property under lease or concession contracts entered into pursuant to the operation and maintenance of Government-owned airports under the jurisdiction of the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MAGNUSON, by request, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The letter presented by Mr. MAGNUSON is as follows:

FEDERAL AVIATION AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., April 5, 1965.

HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
President of the Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: It is requested that the enclosed proposed bill to provide for the alteration, maintenance, and repair of Government buildings and property under lease or concession contracts entered into pursuant to the operation and maintenance of Government-owned airports under the jurisdiction of the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency, and for other purposes, be introduced in the Senate at your earliest convenience.

This proposal would grant specific authority to the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency to include in lease or concession contracts, provisions for the maintenance, repair, and alteration of Government buildings and properties by the grantee, lessee, or permittee notwithstanding the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412; 40 U.S.C. 303(b)). That section reads as follows:

"Except as otherwise specifically provided by law, the leasing of buildings and properties of the United States shall be for money consideration only, and there shall not be included in the lease any provision for the alteration, repair, or improvement of such buildings or properties as a part of the consideration for the rental to be paid for the use and occupation of the same. The moneys derived from such rentals shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

The need for specific legislative authority for this purpose stems from a decision of the Comptroller General No. B-125035, dated February 1, 1962, to the Secretary of the Interior. That decision, which was based on an interpretation of the above quoted section, held that Department of the Interior concession agreements were leases within the meaning of section 303(b) and that, therefore, inclusion of provisions in such agreements for the alteration, repair, or improvement of Federal property by the concessioners was unlawful. (Congress removed the impact of this decision as it relates to the Department of the Interior by enactment of Public Law 87-608.)

The Comptroller General's decision has cast doubt upon the validity of some of our lease and concession agreements entered into in connection with the operation of the two Washington airports. Throughout the 23 years of operations at the Washington National Airport this Agency has entered into a number of leases and concession agreements which call for substantial investment by the tenants and concessionaires in improvements, alterations, and repairs to the airport property which they occupy. The same arrangements are used at the new airport. Rates, fees, and charges at the airports are established on the basis of contribution, in varying degrees, of alteration, repair, and improvement by tenants and concessionaires. If such provisions are held invalid and the Agency required to perform these functions, substantial increase in appropriations would be required. It is also possible that the tenants and concessionaires would gain a substantial windfall by being relieved of the obligation to repair, alter, maintain, and improve the property occupied.

Section 303(b), like other sections of the Economy Act, reflects Congress' concern, among other things, that appropriations to the various agencies not be augmented by administrative devices. This policy consideration loses much of its force, however, when applied to revenue producing activities under the control of Government agencies. In its operation of the two Washington airports, it is the responsibility of this Agency to manage the properties in the most efficient and economical manner to the end that the airports are financially self-sufficient. These airports, being essentially business enterprises, require the application of business practices in their management. In business, it is quite common for the lessee to assume responsibility for the alteration, repair, and improvement of the premises. Leased premises are constantly remodeled, altered, or improved to increase the lessee's revenue or meet competition. The lessee, who must make these decisions, is best equipped to carry them out. Furthermore, the administrative overhead costs to the Government are substantially reduced when responsibility for such work is undertaken by the lessee. Therefore, while the revenue from concessions may be less if repairs and alterations are assumed by the lessee, any loss in revenue will be offset by reduction in the Government's expenditures and other savings in operating costs.

Finally, we believe that placing responsibility upon lessees for the maintenance, repair, and alteration of leased space provides an added incentive for the exercise of greater care by the lessee in the use and treatment of the premises. In the long run, this becomes a significant factor in reducing operating costs and protecting the value of the capital investment.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the administration's program to the submission of this proposed legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely,

N. E. HALABY,
Administrator.

HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1965

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I have been requested to introduce, for the consideration of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, the 1965 omnibus housing bill as reported out by the Housing Subcommittee of the House Committee on Banking and Currency. While I do not necessarily agree with every detail in the House subcommittee bill, I believe it does offer several notable improvements over the administration's original proposal which I joined in co-sponsoring. I am therefore introducing the House subcommittee bill so that the Senate may consider it as a possible alternative.

Perhaps the most notable feature of the House subcommittee bill is the removal of the income floor on the proposed rent supplement plan. As originally proposed, rent subsidies would be paid to moderate-income families whenever their rent exceeded a specified percentage of their income. However, the plan would be limited to those whose incomes were too high for public housing. As the hearings before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee brought out, this would exclude most people with incomes under $3,000 even though this is the very group with the most desperate need for such assistance. I support the removal of the income floor in the House subcommittee bill and I will do all I can to see that this feature is incorporated in the Senate bill.

Another desirable feature of the House subcommittee bill is the continuation of the below-market-rate loan insurance program for middle-income housing. While the administration had indicated a possible intention to phase out this program, the hearings before both committees demonstrated wide support for expanding it. I believe the 3-percent ceiling on the rate of interest as specified in the House subcommittee bill will make this program even more effective, although there may be other ways of achieving a lower rate than the bill indicates.

I was also glad to see the broad bipartisan support for the housing bill shown by members of the House Subcommittee on Housing. Only one Republican voted against the revised bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section summary of this revised housing bill may be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the section-by-section analysis will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1942) to assist in the provision of housing for low- and moderate-income families, to promote orderly urban development, to improve living environment in urban areas, and to extend and amend laws relating to housing, urban renewal, and community facilities, introduced by Mr. DOUGLAS, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The section-by-section analysis presented by Mr. DOUGLAS is as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF THE HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1965

The first section provides that the bill may be cited by its short title—the "Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965".

TITLE I—HOUSING FOR DISADVANTAGED PERSONS

Section 101. Financial assistance to enable certain private housing to be available for lower income families who are elderly, handicapped, displaced, or occupants of substandard housing: This section authorizes the Housing Administrator to undertake and carry out a program of rent supplement payments to help make housing available to individuals and families who are unable to obtain standard private housing. The Administrator would establish income ceilings for each community, taking into account family size, and the income ceiling could not exceed four times the minimum rent required to occupy decent private housing. In addition, eligibility for the program would be limited to the elderly, the handicapped, those displaced by governmental action, and those living in substandard housing.

The Administrator could contract with private nonprofit organizations, limited dividend organizations, or cooperatives to pay them rent supplements where they provide housing financed with FHA section 221 market interest rate insured mortgages. The maximum term of a rent supplement contract would be 40 years, and the payments would be limited to the amount by which the fair market rental of the dwelling unit involved exceeds one-fourth of the tenant's income.

The aggregate amount of rent supplement payments that could be contracted for could not exceed amounts approved in appropriation acts nor $50 million per annum, but this limitation would be increased by $50 million on July 1 of each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968.

The Administrator would certify to the project sponsor the basic facts needed to establish eligibility of tenants, and would recertify tenant incomes at least every 2 years thereafter (except in the case of elderly tenants) so as to permit the adjustment of rental charges and supplement payments under the program on the basis of tenants' income. The Administrator could enter into agreements, or authorize sponsors under the program to enter into agreements, with public or private agencies to provide for the services required in the selection of qualified tenants. The Administrator would be directed to report to the Congress on or before January 1, 1968, with respect to operations under the new program. (H.R. 5840, as amended.)

Section 102. Extension of FHA section 221 programs; modification of interest rate; pooling of mortgages for sale: Subsection (a) extends for 4 years (to Oct. 1, 1969) FHA's authority to insure mortgages under its section 221 programs of housing for moderate income families. These include the sales housing program under subsection (d) (2), the market rate and below market rate rental housing programs for nonprofit mortgagors under subsection (d) (3), and the rental housing program for profitmaking mortgagors under subsection (d) (4). (H.R. 5840.)

Subsection (b) places an interest rate ceiling of 3 percent (or the rate derived under the existing formula, if lower) on mortgages which may be insured by FHA under the section 221(d) (3) below market interest rate program. (The rate is now 3½ percent and will rise to 4 percent or higher on June 30, 1965.) (H.R. 6501.)

Subsection (c) would authorize FNMA to set up a pooling arrangement for section 221 (d) (3) below market interest rate mortgages to substitute private financing for a substantial portion of the amount of such mortgages, thereby reducing the budget impact. This subsection would authorize appropriations to reimburse FNMA where section 221 (d) (3) below market interest rate mortgages are included in any trust under FNMA's program of pooling mortgages and selling participations therein, for the differential between its total outlay for interest and its total receipts from such mortgages.

Section 103. Low-rent housing in private accommodations: This section amends the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 to provide a new form of low-rent housing, utilizing existing privately owned housing to supplement the units provided in low-rent housing projects under the existing program.

Each local public housing agency would conduct a continuing survey and listing of the available privately owned dwelling units within the area under its jurisdiction which provide decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations and are (or can be made) suitable for use as "low-rent housing in private accommodations" under the new program. The owners of housing so listed would be notified from time to time of the anticipated need for dwelling units to be used under the new program, and invited to make their units available for such purpose. (Not more than 10 percent of the units in any single structure could be used in the program, except in the case of buildings with small numbers of units or in other cases determined by the local agency.)

If the local agency finds that units offered in response to such an invitation are (or can be made) suitable for use in the new program, it may approve such units for use as low-rent housing in private accommodations and enter into a contract (having a term of from 1 to 3 years, renewable) with the owner for their use in the program. Each such contract would make the selection of tenants for the units involved a function of the owner of the property subject to the contract between the local agency and PHA, would provide for the negotiation of the rentals by the local agency and the owner (using standards applicable to units in low-rent housing projects), and would contain other appropriate terms and conditions.

Payments under the new program to housing owners would be made from funds generally authorized for annual contributions to low-rent housing; in any case such payments would be limited to the amount of the annual contributions payable for a newly constructed project offering comparable accommodations.

PHA would be directed to report to the Congress on or before January 1, 1968, with respect to operations under the new program. (H.R. 6501.)

Section 104. Low-rent public housing:

Subsection (a) amends section 10(e) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 to increase by $47 million immediately, and by an additional $47 million in each of the years 1966 through 1968, the existing limit on the aggregate amount of contracts for annual contributions which may be entered into by PHA under the low-rent housing program. This increase would provide about 60,000 additional units of low-rent housing annually, to be available both for conventional low-rent housing projects and for the new approaches to low-rent housing contained in the bill (purchase, purchase and rehabilitation, lease and low-rent housing in private accommodations). (H.R. 5840.)

Subsection (b) would provide an alternative formula for computing annual contributions in the case of low-rent housing provided through the purchase, purchase and rehabilitation, or lease of privately owned existing dwelling units. Under the alternative formula a maximum dollar amount (based on the fixed annual contribution otherwise established for a newly constructed housing project offering comparable facilities) could be established as the annual contribution for a purchased or leased unit, thus permitting the acquisition, or acquisition and rehabilitation, of structures over whatever period may be appropriate, as well as the leasing of units for short-term use in meeting particular needs. (H.R. 5840.)

Subsection (c) would establish parity of treatment between handicapped families and elderly families for low-rent housing purposes, thereby extending to handicapped families all of the various special provisions in the act (for example, increased room cost limits in the case of low-rent housing designed specifically for the families involved, and the special contribution of $120 per unit per year for dwelling units occupied by them) presently available to the elderly. (H.R. 5840.)

Subsection (d) would eliminate the existing requirement that there be a 20-percent gap between the upper rental limits for admission to a low-rent housing project and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing a substantial supply of standard housing. Previous laws have already eliminated the 20-percent-gap requirement for the displaced and the elderly.

Section 105. Direct loans to provide housing for the elderly or handicapped: This section would extend the program of direct loans for housing for the elderly under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 for 4 years by removing the dollar ceiling on the authorization for appropriations and in place of it providing that no loans can be made under the program after October 1, 1969. (H.R. 6501.)

In addition, a ceiling of 3 percent (or the amount derived under the existing formula, if lower) would be placed on the interest rate applicable to loans under the program. (Under existing law, the interest rate is the higher of 2½ percent or the rate derived under the formula. The latter is currently 3½ percent and would rise to 4 percent on June 30, 1965.) (H.R. 6501.)

Section 106. Rehabilitation grants to homeowners in urban renewal areas: This section adds a new section 115 to title I of the Housing Act of 1949 (the urban renewal program) to authorize the use of urban renewal capital grant funds for grants to low-income homeowners in an urban renewal area to cover the cost of residential repairs and improvements which are necessary in order to comply with applicable housing codes or other requirements of the urban renewal program.

A rehabilitation grant under the new section 115 may cover the actual cost of the repairs and improvements involved up to a maximum of $1,500; except that if the homeowner's income exceeds $2,000 a year, the grant would in any case be limited to the portion of such cost which cannot be paid for with any available loan that can be amortized without requiring the homeowner's housing expense to exceed 25 percent of his monthly income.

Outstanding contracts under the urban renewal program may be amended to include rehabilitation grants under the new section 115. (H.R. 5840, as amended.)

TITLE II—FHA INSURANCE OPERATIONS

Section 201. Land development: This section would amend the National Housing Act by adding a new title X to authorize a new program of FHA mortgage insurance for land improvement and site development.

FHA would be authorized to insure mortgages to finance acquisition of land and the installation of improvements such as water and sewer lines, streets, curbs, sidewalks, and storm drainage facilities. The new program is designed to help developers to obtain financing on reasonable terms in order to improve their subdivision sites. The FHA Commissioner would be required to give small builders an opportunity to participate in the program and in projects financed with this aid.

The maximum mortgage for a single land insurance undertaking could not exceed $12,500,000. The mortgage maximum would be limited to 50 percent of the Commissioner's estimate of value of the land before development plus 90 percent of his estimate of the cost of such development, subject to an overall ceiling of 75 percent of the value upon completion.

The maximum maturity of the mortgage would be limited to 7 years and the Commissioner would be authorized to prescribe maximum interest rates and premium charges.

To be eligible, the mortgage would have to represent a good mortgage insurance risk in the Commissioner's estimation, and the development would have to be consistent with sound land use patterns and consistent with comprehensive planning being carried on for the area in which the land is situated. It would also have to be served by such shopping, school, recreational, transportation, and other facilities as the Commissioner deems adequate or necessary.

Cost certification would be required to assure that the amount of the mortgage loan outstanding at reasonable intervals during construction does not exceed the maximum loan ratios described above.

The section includes amendments which would make the new land insurance mortgages eligible for FNMA's regular secondary market program, and also would make them eligible investments for national banks and Federal savings and loan associations.

No mortgage could be insured under the new program after October 1, 1969, except pursuant to a commitment to insure issued before that date. (H.R. 5840, as amended.)

Section 202. Extension of insurance authorizations: This section continues for 4 years, until October 1, 1969, FHA's authority to insure (and to make commitments to insure) property improvement loans and housing mortgages under all of its programs (except the sec. 221 program of mortgage insurance for low- and moderate-income families which would be continued for 4 years by sec. 102 of the bill, discussed above). (H.R. 5840.)

Section 203. Multifamily mortgage limits for four or more bedroom units: This section amends FHA's multifamily housing program (secs. 207, 213, 220, 221, 231, and 234 of the National Housing Act) to increase the dollar limitation on the amount of an insurable mortgage in the case of dwelling units having four or more bedrooms. The amount of the increase would range from $2,250 to $2,500 per family unit. No change would be made in the existing limits for dwelling units having less than four bedrooms. (H.R. 5840.)

Section 204. Rehabilitation in urban renewal areas: This section amends section 220 of the National Housing Act (FHA's urban renewal housing program) to increase the maximum amount of an insurable mortgage in a case where the mortgagor is not the occupant of the property but intends to hold it for rental purposes from 85 percent of the amount which an owner-occupant could receive to 93 percent of such amount. The existing 85-percent limit would continue to apply where the nonoccupant mortgagor intends to hold the property for sale rather than rental. Where refinancing is involved, existing indebtedness for improvement of the property could be included in the computation of the mortgage amount whether or not the indebtedness is secured by a mortgage against the property. (H.R. 5840.)

Section 205. Nondwelling facilities for urban renewal housing: This section amends section 220 of the National Housing Act (FHA's urban renewal housing program) to expand the class of nondwelling facilities which may be included in a project financed with a section 220 mortgage. Under the amendment, such a project could include such nondwelling facilities which will contribute to the project's economic feasibility as the Commissioner deems desirable and consistent with the urban renewal plan, so long as the project is predominantly residential. (Under existing law only such nondwelling facilities as are needed to serve the occupants of the project and of other housing in the neighborhood would be included.) (H.R. 5840.)

Section 206. Larger insured mortgages for servicemen: This section amends section 222 of the National Housing Act (FHA mortgage insurance for servicemen) to increase the maximum mortgage amount from $20,000 to $30,000 (the ceiling established for sec. 203 single-family home loans in the Housing Act of 1964). (H.R. 5840.)

Section 207. Refinancing of insured mortgages: This section amends section 223 of the National Housing Act to give FHA the authority to insure mortgages executed for the purpose of refinancing existing mortgages insured under any of FHA's programs; this authority is now available only for mortgages insured under sections 220, 221, 903, 908, and (in certain cases) 608. (H.R. 5840.)

Section 208. Consolidation of FHA insurance funds: This section adds to title V of the National Housing Act a new section 519, providing for the consolidation into a single general insurance fund of all of FHA's existing insurance funds except the mutual mortgage insurance fund, which would continue without change in its present coverage of section 203 mortgages (although sec. 203(k) home improvement loans would be transferred to the new fund). The only other FHA-insured mortgages not covered by the new general insurance fund would be the section 213 cooperative housing mortgages which would be the obligation of the new cooperative management housing insurance fund established by section 209 of the bill (discussed below). (H.R. 5840, as amended.)

Section 209. Mutuality for management-type cooperatives: This section amends section 213 of the National Housing Act to place FHA's mortgage insurance program for management-type cooperatives on a mutual basis. (Sales-type cooperatives would not be included, nor would projects built for sale to cooperatives unless actually so sold.) A new cooperative management housing insurance fund would be created with funds transferred from the general insurance fund (established by sec. 208 of the bill), with a general surplus account and a participating reserve account to which income or loss would be appropriately credited or charged. Cooperative mortgages heretofore insured and transferred to the new fund, as well as cooperative mortgages insured in the future, would be eligible for mutuality. (Messrs. MULTER, FINO, HALPERN.)

Section 210. Optional cash payment of insurance benefits: This section adds to title V of the National Housing Act a new section 520, authorizing the FHA Commissioner in his discretion to pay either in cash or in debentures any insurance claim filed by a mortgagee under any of FHA's programs after the enactment of the bill. (Under existing law payment must be in debentures, except in the case of mortgages insured under secs. 220, 221, and 233 after the enactment of the 1961 Housing Act and loans insured under sec. 203(k) after the enactment of the 1964 act.) The Commissioner could obtain the funds for these cash payments by borrowing from the Treasury. (H.R. 5840.)

Section 211. FHA mortgage financing for veterans: This section amends section 203(b)(2) of the National Housing Act (FHA's regular residential mortgage insurance program) to provide special liberal terms for veterans who have not received benefits under VA housing programs. For these veterans no downpayment would be required on the first $20,000 of value and 15 percent would be required as a downpayment on any amount above $20,000 up to the existing FHA ceilings. (H.R. 6501.)

Section 212. Mortgage limit for homes in outlying areas under FHA section 203(i) program: This section amends section 203(i) of the National Housing Act to increase from $11,000 to $12,500 the dollar limit on the amount of a mortgage which can be insured under the FHA program of mortgage insurance for low-cost housing in outlying areas. (H.R. 6501, as amended.)

TITLE III—URBAN RENEWAL

Section 301. Study of housing and building codes, zoning, tax policies, and development standards: This section directs the HHFA Administrator to conduct a study of housing and building laws, codes, standards, and regulations, zoning and land use laws, codes, and regulations, and Federal, State, and local tax policies, for the purpose of determining how local property owners and private enterprise can be encouraged to serve as large a part of the total housing and building need as they can and how governmental assistance can be so directed as to enable them to serve a larger part of such need. The Administrator would submit a report based on such study to the President and the Congress within 18 months. (H.R. 6501.)

Section 302. General neighborhood renewal plans: This section amends section 102(d) of the Housing Act of 1949 to permit a general neighborhood renewal plan to cover adjoining areas as well as the urban renewal area itself, thereby eliminating the present requirement that the whole area covered by a general neighborhood renewal plan be an urban renewal area, and authorizes such a plan even though the area involved includes subareas which are not themselves so blighted or deteriorated as to require urban renewal treatment. (H.R. 5840, as amended.)

Section 303. Increase in authorization for capital grants: This section amends section 103(b) of the Housing Act of 1949 to increase the aggregate amount of capital grants which the HHFA Administrator may make under the urban renewal program. At present this amount is $4,725 million, including $25 million for mass transportation demonstration grants which is eliminated by the bill; the resulting $4,700 million would be increased by $675 million on the enactment of the bill, by $725 million on July 1, 1966, and by $750 million on July 1 in each of the years 1967 and 1968. (H.R. 5840.)

Section 304. Use of grant funds in code enforcement and rehabilitation projects: This section amends section 110(c) of the Housing Act of 1949 to earmark at least 10 percent of the aggregate amount of the additional capital grant authority provided by section 303 of the bill and subsequent acts, and rehabilitation loans under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964, for projects which involve primarily code enforcement and rehabilitation. (H.R. 6501, as amended.)

Section 305. Strengthened workable program requirement: This section would strengthen the workable program requirement of section 101 of the Housing Act of 1949 to assure that such programs are sufficiently extensive and detailed to prove the need for individual urban renewal projects, and further requires that the Administrator determine that individual projects are in accord with the workable program. (H.R. 5840, as amended.)

Section 306. Rehabilitation loans: This section would extend the program of direct loans for rehabilitation created by the Housing Act of 1964 for 4 years by removing the ceiling on the authorization for appropriations and in its place providing that no loan under the program may be made after October 1, 1969 (H.R. 6501).

Section 307. Lease guarantees for small business concerns displaced by urban renewal projects: This section amends the Small Business Act to authorize the Small Business Administration to assist small business concerns which have been displaced by urban renewal projects in obtaining leases of property, by insuring the owner or lessor of such property against any losses which might be sustained as a result of the small business concern's failure to perform the lease according to its terms. The lease could not be for a term of more than 10 years, and the small business concern would have to satisfy the Administrator that it is financially sound and efficiently managed and will perform the lease according to its terms.

An insurance fund would be established for carrying out the new lease guarantee program, with $5 million authorized from SBA's revolving fund to provide initial capital. Premiums for the insurance would be fixed by SBA, with a maximum premium equivalent to 1 percent of the annual (or minimum) rental payable under the lease (H.R. 6501, as amended; Mr. HARVEY.)

Section 308. Relocation of displacees from urban renewal areas: This section amends section 105(c) of the Housing Act of 1949 in order to expand and implement the existing requirement that there be a feasible method for the temporary relocation of persons displaced from an urban renewal area, and the requirement that there be a relocation assistance program designed to determine the needs of displacees, provide information and aid in minimizing the hardships of displacement, and coordinate relocation activities with other governmental activities in the community. (H.R. 6501, as amended.)

Section 309. Redevelopment in accordance with urban renewal plan: This section amends section 106 of the Housing Act of 1949 to require, as a condition of entering into any urban renewal contract with a local public agency, that such agency demonstrate that its projects theretofore assisted under the urban renewal program have been or will be undertaken and carried out in accordance with the applicable urban renewal plan and the contracts covering such projects. (H.R. 6501, as amended.)

Section 310. Limitation on noncash grant-in-aid credit allowed for publicly owned parking facilities: This section amends section 110(d) of the Housing Act of 1949 to provide that publicly owned parking facilities provided by a locality in connection with the redevelopment of the area can be counted as local grants-in-aid under the urban renewal program only to the extent that the cost of such facilities is not anticipated to be recovered out of the revenues therefrom. (H.R. 6501.)

Section 311. Eligibility of communities in depressed areas for urban renewal assistance: This section would eliminate the 150,000 population limit on eligibility for three-fourths urban renewal grants in depressed communities (those eligible for assistance under sec. 5(a) of the Area Redevelopment Act). (Mr. ST. GERMAIN.)

Section 312. Local grants-in-aid for urban renewal project in Philadelphia: This section makes certain expenditures by the University of Pennsylvania for land acquisition and demolition eligible as local grants-in-aid for purposes of urban renewal project Pennsylvania 5-3 (University City). (Mr. BARRETT.)

TITLE IV—COMPENSATION OF CONDEMNNEES (H.R. 6501, as amended)

Section 401. Declaration of policy: This section establishes a uniform Federal land acquisition policy for real property acquired in federally assisted housing and urban development programs.

Section 402. Definitions: This section defines various terms used in the new title IV. "Development programs" would include most of the housing, clearance, and rehabilitation programs in which the United States provides financial assistance to local agencies in their acquisition of real property. "Federal assistance" would include grants, loans, guarantees, and annual contributions. An "applicant" would be a public or non-profit agency or institution which receives Federal assistance under a development program. An "interest" would be any interest in real property, including future, non-possessory, and leasehold interests. "Real property" would mean land and interests in land, buildings, and fixtures, and articles specially adapted to the use of the property which are not economically capable of use elsewhere.

Section 403. Land acquisition policy: This section conditions Federal assistance under any development program on the applicant's satisfying the Housing Administrator that he will meet certain requirements in acquiring land by eminent domain in the course of such program. The applicant would try to acquire real property by negotiation, and before negotiating (1) would appraise the property, permitting the owner to accompany the appraiser; and (2) would offer the owner a price established by the applicant as fair. In partial takings the applicant would provide the owner with an estimate of the fair market value of the whole property before the remaining property after the acquisition, of the value of the property acquired, and of damages and benefits to the remaining property. Before an owner surrenders possession of his property, the applicant would have to give him 90 days' notice and (1) pay him the negotiated purchase price, or (2) in any case where only the amount of the payment to the owner is in dispute, pay him not less than 75 percent of the most recent fair and reasonable price. Rents charged persons temporarily occupying property acquired by the applicant could not exceed the fair rental value of the premises for the period to be occupied, as determined by the applicant. Applicants could not try to lower the price of acquired property by advancing or deferring condemnation or withholding compensation, and could not leave owners with uneconomic remnants of land. The applicant would be required to take into account human considerations in setting project boundaries.

Section 404. Relocation payments under federally assisted programs: Subsection (a) would extend the relocation payments authorized by section 114 of the Housing Act of 1949 to families, individuals, and business firms displaced by college housing under title IV of the Housing Act of 1950, housing for the elderly under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, public facilities financed under title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955, and the open space program under title VII of the Housing Act of 1961. These payments are now made to persons displaced by urban renewal and public housing.

Subsection (b) would raise the amount of the relocation payment to displaced small business firms (authorized by the Housing Act of 1964) from $1,500 to $2,500.

Subsection (c) would authorize reimbursement of the local agency for the payment of certain costs involved in the transfer of real property to the public body or other recipient of Federal aid. To the extent that they would otherwise be borne by the seller, payment would be authorized to cover (1) recording fees, transfer taxes, and similar expenses, (2) mortgage prepayment penalties, and (3) the pro rata portion of taxes covering a period after transfer of title.

Subsection (d) provides that these provisions become effective upon the date of enactment of the bill.

Section 405. Funds for certain payments in eminent domain: This section makes a technical amendment.

TITLE V—COLLEGE HOUSING

Section 501. Increase in authorization for college housing loans: This section amends the Housing Act of 1950 (the college housing loan program) to increase the total amount authorized for college housing loans (presently $2,875 million) by $300 million on July 1 in each of the years 1965 through 1968, for a total increase of $1,200 million. (H.R. 6501.)

Section 502. Interest rate on college housing loans: This section amends the 1950 act to place a ceiling of 3 percent (or the amount derived under the existing formula, if lower) on the interest rate applicable to college housing loans. (Under existing law, the interest rate is the higher of 2½ percent or the rate derived under the formula. The latter is currently 3¼ percent and will rise to 4 percent on June 30, 1965.) (H.R. 6501.)

Section 503. Parking facilities for colleges and universities: This section would amend the college housing loan program to make parking facilities for faculty and students eligible for these loans.

TITLE VI—COMMUNITY FACILITIES (H.R. 5840, as amended)

Section 601. Purpose: This section states that the purpose of title VI of the bill is to assist and encourage the Nation's communities in (1) the construction of adequate basic water and sewer facilities needed to promote efficient and orderly growth and development, and (2) the construction of neighborhood facilities for programs of necessary social services.

Section 602. Grants for basic water and sewer facilities: This section would authorize the HHFA Administrator to make grants (up to 50 percent of development cost) to local public bodies and agencies for the construction of basic public water and sewer facilities.

No such grant could be made unless the project is necessary to orderly community development and is designed so that an adequate capacity will be available to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area. Further, no such grant may be made unless the project is consistent with a program for a unified or officially coordinated areawide water or sewer facilities system as part of the comprehensively planned development of the area; except that prior to July 1968 such a grant could be made if a program for an areawide system is under active preparation but not yet completed, provided the project for which assistance is sought is urgently needed and can reasonably be expected to be required as part of such program.

Section 603. Grants for neighborhood facilities: This section would authorize the Administrator to make grants (up to 66⅔ percent of development cost, or 75 percent in the case of projects located in depressed areas designated under sec. 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act) to local public bodies and agencies for the construction of neighborhood facilities which are (1) necessary for carrying out a program of health, recreational, social, or similar community services (including a community action program under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964); (2) consistent with comprehensive planning for the development of the community; and (3) so located as to be available for use by a significant portion or number of the area's low- or moderate-income residents.

A neighborhood facility constructed with such a grant could not be converted to other uses for a period of 20 years, without the Administrator's approval. Priority would be given to projects designed primarily to benefit members of low-income families or otherwise substantially further the objectives of a community action program under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

Section 604. General provisions: This section confers upon the Administrator the usual functions, powers, and duties, and authorizes him to make advance or progress payments on account of any grant made under the program.

Section 605. Definitions: This section defines various terms used in the new title VI. (The term "development cost" would mean the costs of the construction of the facility and the land on which it is located, including necessary site improvements to permit its use as a site for such facility.)

Section 606. Labor standards: This section makes applicable to construction work financed with assistance under sections 602 and 603 the prevailing wage standards of the Davis-Bacon Act, and the authority generally available to the Secretary of Labor with respect to the enforcement of such standards.

Section 607. Appropriations; termination of program: Subsection (a) authorizes the appropriation of the funds necessary to carry out the new title VI, and provides that all funds so appropriated will remain available until expended.

Subsection (b) provides a cutoff date of October 1, 1969, for the title VI program.

TITLE VII—FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

Section 701. Increase in FNMA special assistance authority: Subsection (a) amends section 305(c) of the National Housing Act to increase the amount of special assistance which the President can authorize FNMA to provide for housing and community development (presently $1,700 million) by $100 million on the enactment of the bill, by $450 million on July 1, 1966, by $550 million on July 1, 1967, and by $525 million on July 1, 1968 (for a total increase of $1,625 million). (H.R. 5840, as amended.)

Subsection (b) would provide for the transfer to and merger with FNMA's regular special assistance authority of the balance (approximately $220 million) of the amount of special assistance authorized for housing for the military, NASA, and AEC financed with FHA title VIII insured mortgages. (H.R. 5840.)

Section 702. Increase in limitation on mortgages for dwelling units having four or more bedrooms: This section amends section 302(b) of the National Housing Act to increase the maximum amount of a mortgage which FNMA can buy in its special assistance program from $17,500 to $20,000 per dwelling unit in the case of dwelling units having four or more bedrooms. (Mr. Reuss.)

TITLE VIII—OPEN-SPACE LAND AND URBAN BEAUTIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT (H.R. 5840, as amended)

Section 801. Change in name of program; findings and purpose: This section changes the name of the existing open-space land program (title VII of the Housing Act of 1961) so that it will include a reference to "urban beautification and improvement," thus reflecting the proposed new program of grants for urban beautification and improvement (described below). It would also expand the existing statement of congressional findings and purpose so as to reflect the need for this new program as well as the proposed new program (also described below) to provide open-space land in built-up urban areas.

Section 802. Increased grant level for preservation of open-space land: This section increases from 20 to 30 percent of the land acquisition cost (and from 30 to 40 percent of such cost in cases to which the higher rate is applicable) the maximum amount of any grant which may be made under the existing title VII program for the preservation of open-space land.

Section 803. Substitution of appropriation authority for grant contract authority: This section would eliminate the present $75 million contract authority for grants under title VII of the 1961 act and substitute authority for the appropriation of such amounts (without dollar limit) as may be necessary to carry out the title. This authorization would apply to all aspects of the open-space program in the existing title VII as well as to the two proposed new grant programs discussed below. The bill also provides a cutoff date of October 1, 1969, for the programs under title VII of the 1961 act.

Section 804. Grants for provision of open space land in built-up urban areas: This section adds to title VII of the 1961 act a new section 705, authorizing the HHFA Administrator to make grants to States and local public bodies to assist them in the acquisition of developed land in built-up portions of urban areas for clearance and use as open-space land. Grants for this purpose (which could not exceed $500,000 or 40 percent of the acquisition and demolition cost) could be made only where adequate open-space land cannot effectively be provided through the use of existing undeveloped land and the proposed acquisition is important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality. Such grants could include relocation payments for individuals, families, business concerns, and nonprofit organizations displaced by projects assisted under the title VII programs.

Section 805. Grants for urban beautification and improvement: This section adds to title VII of the 1961 act a new section 706, authorizing the Administrator to make grants to States and local public bodies to assist in carrying out local programs (utilizing all available public and private resources for the beautification of the land involved, and important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality) for the greater use and enjoyment of open-space and other public land in urban areas. Such a grant could not exceed 40 percent of the amount by which the community's activities under the program during any fiscal year exceeds its usual expenditures for comparable activities; except that up to $5 million of the available funds could be used in making 100-percent grants for activities determined by the Administrator to have special value in developing and demonstrating new and improved methods and materials for urban beautification and improvement.

Section 806. Labor standards: This section adds to title VII of the 1961 act a new section 707, making applicable to construction work financed with assistance under such title the prevailing wage standards of the Davis-Bacon Act (and the usual time-and-a-half overtime provisions), along with the authority generally available to the Secretary of Labor with respect to the enforcement of such standards and provisions.

Section 807. Use of funds for studies and publication: This section permits the Administrator to use open-space grant appropriations (up to $100,000 per year) for undertaking and publishing open-space surveys and other studies in connection with title VII activities. (Under existing law such studies and publications must be financed through separate appropriations.)

Section 808. Conforming amendments: This section makes necessary technical and conforming amendments in various provisions of title VII of the 1961 act to reflect the inclusion of the two new grant programs.

TITLE IX—RURAL HOUSING (H.R. 5840, as amended)

Section 901. Loans for previously occupied buildings and minimum site acquisition: This section amends section 501 of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans to farmers and rural residents for the purchase of previously occupied dwellings and related facilities and farm service buildings and for minimum adequate building sites.

Section 902. Interest rate on direct rural housing loans: This section amends section 502(a) of the Housing Act of 1949 to increase to 5 percent the maximum interest rate on direct loans under section 502, except for loans to elderly persons in accordance with section 501(a)(3) and loans in accordance with sections 503 and 504, which would remain at 4 percent. It would also authorize the Secretary to charge fees on all title V loans.

Section 903. Insured rural housing loans: Subsection (a) of this section adds to title V of the Housing Act of 1949 two new sections (517 and 518).

The new section 517 would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to insure loans, and make loans to be sold insured, in accordance with section 502; except that such loans to persons of low or moderate income would bear interest not above 5 percent and be limited to adequate housing modest in size, design, and cost and to an aggregate of $300 million per year, and such loans to other persons would be made at rates and charges comparable to those in effect under FHA's section 203 program. To assure the marketability of these loans to private investors within the interest ceiling set by this section, it is further provided that the Secretary may enter into a repurchase agreement with the investor but in no event could the agreement be for less than 5 years.

The new section 517 would also establish a new rural housing insurance fund to finance insured section 502 loans and to be utilized by the Secretary for various specified purposes. The new fund would be used in lieu of the agricultural credit insurance fund for section 514 domestic farm labor housing and section 515(b) elderly rental housing loans. Loans made out of the fund and held unsold could not exceed $100 million at any one time. The Secretary would be authorized to borrow from the Treasury to meet loan insurance obligations and to make other authorized expenditures from the fund.

The new section 518 would establish a rural housing direct loan account, and would transfer to such account all rural housing direct loans made under sections 502, 503, 504, and 515(a) of the 1949 act, all collections therefrom, and any funds available from appropriations or Treasury borrowings for such loans. Amounts transferred to the account and such further amounts as may be appropriated would be available for making loans under the above sections and for making repayments to the Treasury.

Subsection (b) of section 903 of the bill amends section 511 of the Housing Act of 1949 to extend for 4 years (to October 1, 1969) the unused balance (approximately $101 million) of the existing borrowing authority under section 511, and to remove the existing special reservation of $50 million exclusively for loans to elderly persons in accordance with section 501(a)(3).

Section 904. Federal National Mortgage Association secondary market operations for insured rural housing loans: This section amends title III of the National Housing Act to authorize FNMA to purchase loans insured under the new provisions of title V of the Housing Act of 1949 in its secondary market operations.

Section 905. Extension of rural housing authorizations: This section amends title V of the Housing Act of 1949 to extend for 4 years (to October 1, 1969) the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make section 503 loan contribution commitments, the authority for appropriations to finance assistance under sections 504(a), 504(b), 506, and 516, and the authority of the Secretary to make section 515(b) rental housing loans for elderly persons. It would also increase from $10 to $50 million the total amount of appropriations authorized for section 516 assistance to provide low-rent housing for domestic farm labor, and would extend the construction standards and technical services provisions of section 506(a) to operations under the new provisions added to title V by the bill.

Section 906. Payment of interest to the Treasury on appropriations for rural housing loans: This section adds to title V of the Housing Act of 1949 a new section 519, directing the Secretary of Agriculture to pay into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury any surpluses from the new rural housing insurance fund or the new rural housing direct loan account. It would also provide for payment to the Treasury of interest on any portions of future appropriations to such fund or account for the purpose of making loans until returned to miscellaneous receipts.

Authorization for urban planning grants: This section amends section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954 to eliminate the existing $105 million ceiling on the total amount authorized to be appropriated for urban planning grants thereunder. Section 1004. Advisory committees—Technical provision: This section eliminates from section 601 of the Housing Act of 1949 (relating to HHFA advisory committees) a provision which has become obsolete. (H.R. 5840.)

Section 1005. Public facility loans to non-profit corporations: This section amends section 202 of the Housing Amendments of 1955 (the community facilities program) to permit the Housing Administrator to make loans to private nonprofit corporations to finance the construction of works for the storage, treatment, purification, or distribution of water, or the construction of sewage, sewage treatment, and sewer facilities, if such works or facilities are needed to serve communities with a population of less than 10,000 and no existing public body is able to construct and operate them. (H.R. 5840.)

Section 1006. FHA conforming amendments: This section amends various provisions of the National Housing Act to reflect the consolidation of FHA insurance funds into a single general insurance fund under section 208 of the bill. (H.R. 5840.)

It would also confer upon District of Columbia associations the same powers with respect to the investment of assets as are authorized for Federal savings and loan associations.

Section 1008. Urban renewal project in Johnson City, Tenn.: This section permits certain electrical installations to be counted as local noncash grants-in-aid for an urban renewal project in Johnson City, Tenn.

Section 1009. Repayment of certain planning grants: This section would waive repayment of a planning advance made to the city of Woonsocket, R.I., for a project built under the accelerated public works program.

DEVELOPMENT OF ELLIS ISLAND AS A PART OF THE STATUE OF LIBERTY NATIONAL MONUMENT

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a joint resolution to provide for the development of Ellis Island as a part of the Statue of Liberty National Monument, and for other purposes.

At a special ceremony at the White House this morning, the President issued a proclamation adding Ellis Island to the Statue of Liberty National Monument. I was honored to attend that ceremony. For all of us, the President's proclamation called to mind once again the unique role Ellis Island has played in our history.

The island came into Federal possession in 1800. Its symbolic role as gateway to a new land and a new life for citizens of foreign lands was assumed 90 years later when the Federal Bureau of Immigration undertook to develop the island as an immigration station.

Ellis Island was our official host to 70 percent of all those who immigrated to this country between 1892 and 1954. By the millions they came, the "little people" and those who were later to achieve prominence in their new country. They came seeking refuge, liberty, and freedom. They helped forge our unique American heritage, and they lent their skills and energies to the job of building America's position as a world power.

Ellis Island was the birthplace of many millions of Americans. Stepping into the shadow of the torch of liberty, these immigrants from many lands were born into a new world.

In 1954, the use of Ellis Island as host to our immigrants was discontinued. It remains, however, nationally symbolic of our friendship to those of other lands and of our indebtedness to those who have helped to make America the Nation it is today. The island is, therefore, eminently qualified for protection and preservation for generations of Americans yet to come.

The proclamation the President issued this morning provides that the Department of the Interior shall administer the island. No funds, however, shall be expended for its development as part of the national monument unless otherwise provided by an act of Congress. The resolution I am introducing today authorizes the appropriation of such funds as may be necessary for this purpose.

Although the resolution does not specify the amount of funds required for this project, the Department of the Interior tentatively places total development costs at $6 million. Of this amount, approximately $2,450,000 would be expended during the first 5 years after the establishment of the national monument. Development plans include landscaping, rehabilitation of several existing buildings, and other work.

The resolution has the support of the Department of the Interior, and the Bureau of the Budget has advised that the proposal is in accord with the program of the President.

President Johnson also announced this morning the establishment of a Job Corps in Jersey City, N.J. Part of the work-training provided corpsmen will be in the development of a New Jersey State park at Jersey City. Ellis Island, of course, lies only a few hundred yards off the Jersey City shorefront, and the park will be an appropriate waterfront setting for this new national monument. Ultimately we will see the enlarged Statue of Liberty Monument, including Ellis Island, linked to the New Jersey park by a causeway or bridge.

The development of Ellis Island and the adjacent park in Jersey City will add a priceless recreational and historic asset to our New Jersey waterfront. All of us in the Congress who have been pressing for this kind of project are particularly pleased with the Interior Department's recommendations. Secretary Udall and his staff are to be commended for their excellent work.

Mr. President, those of our citizens who can trace their ancestry as Americans to Ellis Island can attest that they have made the most of the freedom and opportunity which were opened to them. By building this monument to the courage and energy of our immigrant citizens we can memorialize one of the great chapters of American history.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGovern in the chair). The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 79) to provide for the development of Ellis Island as a part of the Statue of Liberty National Monument, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to reduce from 30 days to 7 days the minimum time required to advertise the sale of national forest timber in the affected area. Authorizes the appropriation of not to exceed $50 million for fiscal year 1965 and not to exceed $20 million for fiscal year 1966 to the Department of Commerce for the repair and reconstruction of highways, roads, and trails, on a national basis, which are damaged as a result of a disaster.

HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1965

MAY 21, 1965.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

Mr. PATMAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following

REPORT

[To accompany H.R. 7984]

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 7984) to assist in the provision of housing for low- and moderate-income families, to promote orderly urban development, to improve living environment in urban areas, and to extend and amend laws relating to housing, urban renewal, and community facilities, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

WHAT THE BILL WOULD DO

The committee bill provides a comprehensive legislative framework for Government-assisted housing and urban development programs over the next 4 years. The bill proposes important new programs designed to increase the supply of housing for low-income families and to help our cities cope with the problems of urban and suburban expansion. It makes extensive improvements in our existing housing programs and provides the necessary extensions and additional funds to keep new and existing programs of Federal assistance in the housing and urban development field in full operation over the next 4-year period. Taken in concert, the many provisions of the bill will make possible an accelerated attack on the problems of urban blight, a substantial improvement in housing conditions in both urban and rural communities, and more orderly growth of cities and communities of all sizes. The principal provisions are briefly summarized as follows:

Title I—Housing for disadvantaged persons

This title provides a comprehensive set of programs designed to make decent housing available to families of low and moderate income.

(1) It would establish a new program of rent supplements to pay a portion of the rent of low-income families and enable nonprofit sponsors utilizing market-interest-rate loans to provide a substantial quantity of housing for low-income families.

(2) It would extend for 4 years the present below-market section 221(d)(3) housing program for moderate-income families and establish a maximum 3-percent interest rate.

(3) It would provide authorization for an estimated 60,000 additional units of low-rent public housing a year for 4 years and, in addition, would broaden the program to permit an increased use of existing housing, including a new rent certificate feature to be used in connection with privately owned existing housing.

(4) It would extend the program of direct loans for housing for the elderly and would establish a maximum interest rate of 3 percent for such loans.

(5) It would provide grant payments to low income homeowners, particularly the elderly, in urban renewal areas to enable them to repair their homes and not be dispossessed.

Title II—FHA insurance operations

This title would authorize a new program of FHA mortgage insurance for land development in subdivisions. It would also extend all of the FHA insurance programs for an additional 4 years (they would otherwise expire on October 1, 1965), would provide mutuality for management type cooperatives, and for the first time would permit no-downpayment loans for veterans under the FHA insurance program.

Title III—Urban renewal

This title would provide $2.9 billion additional in urban renewal grant funds to continue the program for 4 more years. In addition, it would tighten the urban renewal program requirements to minimize relocation hardships and encourage more efficient program operation. It would continue the 3-percent rehabilitation loan program authorized in the Housing Act of 1964 for 4 years, and would provide a new program of lease guarantees for small business concerns displaced by urban renewal projects.

Title IV—Compensation of condemnees

This title would provide a new feature designed to protect displaced homeowners and businesses. It would do this through increased relocation payments and also by assuring owners a prompt and substantial partial payment for their properties pending final court settlement.

Title V—College housing

This title would increase the authorization for college housing loans by $300 million a year over each of the next 4 years and would establish a maximum interest rate of 3 percent.

Title VI—Community facilities

This title would—

- (1) authorize matching grants to local public bodies for the construction of basic public water and sewer facilities; and
- (2) provide grants for a new program to enable local public bodies to construct neighborhood facilities, including essential health, recreational, and community centers with priority to projects designed to further the objectives of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

Title VII—Federal National Mortgage Association

This title would provide an increase in FNMA special assistance authority by increments over 4 years to a total increase of $1,625 million. The bulk of this assistance would go to support the below-market interest rate section 221(d)(3) housing program for families of moderate income.

Title VIII—Open space land and urban beautification and improvement

This title would—

- (1) increase the grants in the open space land program from 20 to 30 percent of land acquisition cost (and to 40 percent in special cases);
- (2) provide a new program of grant assistance to provide open space land for parks and playgrounds in built-up urban areas; and
- (3) provide grant assistance to local public bodies to carry out local programs of urban beautification and improvement.

Title IX—Rural housing

This title would provide a new program of insured housing loans under the Farmers Home Administration to permit private capital to make mortgage financing available in rural and rural nonfarm areas.

Title X—Miscellaneous

This title would extend for 4 years the section 701 urban planning grant program and the section 702 public works planning advance program, and would permit savings and loan associations to make loans to construct college dormitories.

BACKGROUND OF THE BILL

On March 2, 1965, the President transmitted to the Congress his Message on the Problems and Future of the Central City and its Suburbs, and requested enactment of the administration's Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965. During the 2-week period, March 25 to April 7, 1965, the Subcommittee on Housing held intensive hearings on the administration's bill, H.R. 5840, introduced by Mr. Patman, and related bills, including H.R. 6501, introduced by Mr. Widnall, the ranking minority member of the subcommittee.

Expert and detailed testimony was received covering all phases of the proposed legislation. The subcommittee heard detailed testimony from the Housing and Home Finance Administrator and the heads of constituent agencies, and the Farmers Home Administrator. Many other witnesses reflecting the viewpoints of the homebuilding, real estate, and mortgage lending industries, labor organizations, civic groups, mayors, cooperative groups, and others provided the committee with the benefit of their knowledge and their recommendations.

The Subcommittee on Housing met in executive session on May 6, 1965, and approved an amended bill by a vote of 10 to 1. The bill approved by the subcommittee embodied the great bulk of the legislative recommendations contained in H.R. 5840, the administration's general housing bill, and also incorporated important and improving provisions adopted from H.R. 6501.

The bill reported from the subcommittee was introduced on May 6, 1965, as a clean bill by Mr. Patman (H.R. 7984), and identical bills were introduced by Mr. Barrett (H.R. 7985) and Mr. Widnall (H.R. 7986).

The full committee met in executive session for closed hearings on Monday and Tuesday, May 17 and 18. On Monday the Housing Administrator and the heads of his constituent agencies made themselves available for questioning on the clean bill, and on Tuesday a panel of public interest groups was invited. They included representatives of the National Housing Conference, the mayors groups, the AFL-CIO, the Cooperative League, and the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association.

On Wednesday, May 19, the full committee met in executive session to mark up the bill and reported H.R. 7984 without amendment by a rollcall vote of 26 to 7.

TITLE I—HOUSING FOR DISADVANTAGED PERSONS

Your committee has consistently worked over the years in an attempt to frame legislative aids to provide housing for low-income families. While considerable progress has been made in past legislation, your committee is gratified that in this year's bill we have been able to incorporate new forms of assistance which, with the extensions and improvements of existing programs authorized by the bill, will help provide decent, safe, and sanitary housing for thousands of families presently unable to afford anything but substandard housing.

A new program of rent supplements

In his message on housing, President Johnson stated: "The most crucial new instrument in our effort to improve the American city is the rent supplement."

Section 101 of the bill would establish a program of Federal rent supplement payments on behalf of lower income families who are elderly or handicapped, who are displaced from their homes by public action, or who are occupants of substandard housing. With the rent supplement payments made on their behalf, these persons will be able to afford the rentals on privately constructed and financed decent, safe, and sanitary housing designed to meet the needs of low- and moderate-income people.

The rent supplement payments authorized by the bill would be made with respect to housing built by private nonprofit or limited dividend corporations, or by cooperatives, and financed with section 221(d)(3) market-interest-rate mortgages insured by FHA (profit sponsors would be excluded.) The rent supplement payments could be made on behalf of any individual or family unable to obtain standard privately owned housing in his community at a rental which is equal to or less than one-quarter of his income, and who is either displaced by governmental action, elderly or physically handicapped, or occupying substandard housing. The Housing Administrator would determine for each community the minimum monthly rent required to obtain standard private housing in the area for families of various size. Rent supplement payments could not be made on behalf of anyone whose income was more than four times the minimum rent required to obtain standard private housing in the area.

The amount of the rent supplement payment made on behalf of an individual or family occupying a dwelling unit for which a rent supplement payment may be made could not exceed the difference between 25 percent of the tenant's income and the full rent that is required for the dwelling unit occupied by the individual or family. The committee expects that, for the purpose of determining the amount of the income of an individual or family, all income, from every source, whether taxable or not, of the individual or adult members of the family will be included. If, after he moves into the dwelling unit, the income of the individual or family increases, the amount of the rent supplement payments on his behalf is reduced. If his income increases sufficiently so that he can pay the full economic rent with 25 percent of his income, rent supplement payments on his behalf would cease to be made. The tenant could, however, continue to live in the project and would not be required to pay more than the full economic rent.

The organizations owning the private projects assisted under the program would select the occupants, subject only to certain facts relating to eligibility as determined by the Housing Administrator or his delegate. Prospective occupants or their applications would be referred by the housing owner to the offices or agencies designated by the Administrator for the purpose of certifying the facts concerning eligibility. More specifically, the certification would relate to the tenant's age or physical handicap where this is the basis for eligibility, or displacement, or occupancy of substandard housing. Certifications would also relate to incomes at initial occupancy. Every 2 years thereafter, or more frequently if the Housing Administrator deems it desirable, recertifications of income would be required, except in the case of the elderly. The incomes of elderly persons or families seldom increase so that there would be little if any need to require recertification of incomes of the elderly.

The rent supplement payments authorized by the bill could also be made with respect to units rented under a lease with option to purchase. The committee expects that this program will involve cooperative housing projects, and sales-type projects where units such as row or detached houses would be rented initially but would be so designed that they later could be transferred to individual ownership, as the income of the tenant rises to the point where he can afford to purchase the unit.

In order to help achieve low rents, projects containing units for which rent supplement payments could be made would be of modest design, constructed to the standards prescribed for the FHA section 221(d)(3) below-market interest rate insured loan program. Financing, however, would be provided by means of FHA section 221 market interest rate insured loans, with the regular mortgage insurance premium and a maximum term of 40 years.

Under the rent supplement program provided by the bill, the HHFA would enter into a separate contract with the owner of each project in which tenants are to receive the benefit of rent supplement payments. The contract would provide for rent supplement payments by the HHFA to the owner during the period in which the project is covered by an FHA-insured mortgage with the maximum term for any such contract being set at 40 years. The contract would specify the number of units in the project to be made available to tenants for whom rent supplement payments would be made. It would specify a maximum dollar amount to be paid annually by the HHFA to the owner of the project based on the total rent for the number of units in the project to be made available for rent supplement payments. It would also provide that the amount of monthly payments to be made will be determined on the basis of the total of the amounts required by way of a rent supplement payment for each particular tenant and that these amounts will be adjusted periodically as tenants move out, as new tenants move in, and as there are changes in the income of tenants receiving the supplement payments.

The supplement payments could be made on a monthly or other periodic basis by the HHFA to the project owner. An owner would not receive any payment for units which are not occupied.

The Federal rent supplement payments contracted to be made under this program could not exceed appropriations of $50 million per annum prior to July 1, 1966, and this amount would be increased by $50 million on July 1 of each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968.

A significant proportion of the high volume of rental housing that was built in the last few years was beyond the economic reach of many people who live in substandard housing or who have been displaced or who are elderly. It has become evident that there is a saturation of the high-rent segment of many local housing markets. Your committee believes the rent supplement program would enable many people of low and moderate income to translate their housing needs into effective demand and thus lend support to the homebuilding component of the economy.

A number of existing Federal and State housing programs have been of significant value in helping low- and moderate-income families to obtain standard housing. However, as helpful as these programs have been, they reach only a very small part of the total number of low- and moderate-income families. Of the approximately 1.6 million housing starts last year, only a small proportion were units assisted under Federal or State programs designed to help these families.

There are almost 8 million American families who still live in substandard housing. Many of these families are within the income range where they are unable to afford decent housing. Of these families, almost half are elderly or handicapped. There are also an estimated 300,000 families who will be displaced from their homes by governmental action over the next 4 years, and many of them will be in this income range.

It is this group to which the proposed new program is directed.

The volume of housing needed to meet the needs of this group can be supplied best through the resources and initiative of private enterprise. The rent supplement proposal in the bill would use private enterprise.

The committee believes the rent supplement program would make possible many other desirable achievements:

- (1) It would allow greater flexibility in helping people with low incomes to obtain standard housing.

(2) The amount of the Federal payment would vary in accordance with the need. It would be larger for those of lower income and smaller for those of higher income.

(3) The amount of the Federal payment would be reduced as family income rises, and would be discontinued when the income is sufficient to pay an economic rent.

(4) Families could continue to occupy their dwelling units and pay the full required rent when they no longer need Federal payments.

(5) The variation in the amount of rent supplement payment, in accordance with income, would permit a mixture of income levels in projects under this program.

(6) It would encourage the active sponsorship of civic-minded lending institutions and business leaders.

FHA's section 221 programs for low- and moderate-income persons

Extension of programs.—The bill would continue for 4 years FHA's authority to insure mortgages under its section 221 programs of housing for low- and moderate-income persons (from September 30, 1965, to October 1, 1969). This includes extension of the (d)(2) low downpayment sales housing program, the (d)(3) below market and market interest rate programs for rental and cooperative housing, and the (d)(4) rental housing program. The low downpayment and liberal mortgage terms permitted under the section 221(d)(2) program have made homeownership possible for over 133,000 families. Many of them could never have become homeowners without this program.

These programs are FHA's principal programs for assisting housing for low- and moderate-income families, and displaced families. They are an important part of the total package of Federal housing programs.

Modification of interest rate.—The section 221(d)(3) below market mortgage insurance program was established by the Housing Act of 1961 to provide long-term low-interest loan assistance to aid in the financing of rental and cooperative housing for displaced families and families of low and moderate incomes. The loans may be repayable over a period not exceeding 40 years at an interest rate not less than the average current yield on all marketable obligations of the United States, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 percent. For housing projects financed under this program FHA has waived its mortgage insurance premium.

The committee believes that the 221(d)(3) below-market interest rate program has been, and can continue to be, an extremely effective tool for providing housing designed to meet the needs of moderate-income families whose incomes are below the levels needed to obtain private housing.

From the beginning of the section 221(d)(3) program through March 31, 1965, a total of 537 project applications were received involving 72,995 units with a mortgage amount of $879,558,293. During this period FHA issued commitments on 296 projects containing 39,371 units with a mortgage amount of $465,739,285. Also, during this period, FHA insured 210 projects containing 29,967 units with a total mortgage amount of $353,210,000. During 1962, the first full year of operation, mortgages totaling $46.5 million were insured at the below-market rate on 27 projects containing 3,867 units. In 1963, mortgages totaling close to $98 million were insured on 59 projects with 8,690 units, and in 1964, mortgages totaling $177 million were insured on 99 projects with 14,527 units. It is clear that activity has been expanding rapidly under this program.

When the section 221(d)(3) program commenced operations in 1961, the interest rate was 3½ percent. Subsequently the rate was increased to 3¾ percent and in 1964 the rate was raised to 3⅞ percent. The committee is advised that current trends indicate that the program interest rate is expected to rise again on June 30, this time to 4½ percent.

The rising interest rates, and increasing construction costs, are reflected in a steadily increasing average mortgage amount per unit built under the program. This has had an effect upon rents. The median rent per unit in projects for which commitments were issued in 1963 and 1964 has risen, for all types of units, from $87 to $102; for two-bedroom units the median rent has risen from $90 to $103.

This committee is determined that the intended objective of low interest rates which help produce moderate rentals for units constructed under this program shall not be frustrated by the erratic fluctuations of an arbitrary interest rate formula.

Since one of the objectives of the section 221(d)(3) program is to assure the availability of low interest rate loans, your committee has concluded that it is justified in taking action to assure the accomplishment of this objective. Accordingly, the bill places an interest-rate ceiling of 3 percent on mortgages which may be insured by FHA under the section 221(d)(3) below-market interest rate program. Should the statutory formula produce a lower interest rate, that rate would apply.

Eligibility for rehabilitation.—The bill as reported by the committee would authorize the financing of a project involving rehabilitation, as well as construction, under the 221(d)(3) program with rent supplements. During the course of the hearings the Housing Administrator testified that in administering the program it was probable that the financing would be largely confined to new construction.

The committee agrees that it would be desirable to channel the major portion of the program into new construction, particularly for the purpose of stimulating the residential construction industry during periods of declining housing starts. However, we are also of the view that rehabilitation is important and that it should be encouraged through the use of these programs. At the same time we know that care will have to be exercised in administering the program in order to avoid having it become a vehicle for refinancing projects which are experiencing difficulties.

To achieve the objectives of the legislation we believe that, in the case of existing housing, loans should only be approved which involve the acquisition and major rehabilitation of existing projects that will otherwise meet the eligibility criteria. The rehabilitation should be of such a nature that the dwelling units placed upon the market are substantially upgraded rather than having amenities added which, while desirable, may not be essential for the upgrading of the units.

We believe these criteria should also govern rehabilitation under the section 221(d)(3) below market interest rate program.

Pooling of mortgages for sale.—The Housing Act of 1964 authorized FNMA to sell to private investors participations in a trust, secured by a pool of mortgage loans held by FNMA under its special assistance program or management and liquidation functions, or held by other Federal agencies. These participations permit the substitution of funds of private investors for Treasury funds to finance these mortgage holdings.

As a practical matter, the mortgage loans that go into the pool have to bear interest rates sufficient to generate an income that could be used to pay the interest on the participation certificates. Since the interest rates borne by section 221(d)(3) below-market mortgage loans are less than the interest rates obtainable on participation certificates, no such section 221(d)(3) mortgage loans have been included in the pool.

The committee contemplates that FNMA will include mortgages bearing below-market interest rates and insured by FHA after the date of enactment of the bill under section 221(d)(3) within one or more of the trusts or other agencies and related mortgage pools created pursuant to section 302(c) of the FNMA Charter Act, and substitute private financing for substantial portions of the amounts of such mortgages by selling participations predicated on them.

To make it feasible for section 221(d)(3) below-market mortgage loans to be included in future pooling arrangements as security for additional participation certificates, the bill would expressly authorize appropriations from time to time to reimburse FNMA for the amount of the differential (including interest, other costs, and a fair proportion of administrative expense) between (1) the total outlay with respect to outstanding participations or other instruments that are in an amount not to exceed the dollar amount of such below-market interest rate mortgages, and (2) the total receipts from such mortgages. The major items in the differential would be interest and the cost of marketing the participations. The amounts authorized for appropriations would serve to measure the cost to the Government of that part of the below-market interest rate housing program which is financed privately through the sale of participations.

Low-rent public housing

Increase in authorization for annual contributions.—The bill would increase the authorization for annual contributions contracts under the low-rent public housing program by an amount of $47 million immediately, and by an additional $47 million in each of the years 1966 through 1968. This increase would provide an estimated 60,000 additional units of low-rent housing annually over this period. It would be available both for conventional low-rent housing projects and for the new approaches to low-rent housing contained in the bill (purchase, purchase and rehabilitation, lease, and low-rent housing in private accommodations).

This authorization would cover the amounts needed for relocation costs and the special contribution for the elderly, the handicapped, and displacees, as well as the regular annual contribution.

The authorization for 37,500 additional units for low-rent housing contained in the Housing Act of 1964 was an interim increase. The Agency reported to the committee that the local communities' accumulated demands, based on the needs of their low-income families and elderly, have reached about 90,000 units, well over twice the number authorized. This leaves a backlog in the neighborhood of 50,000 for which no annual contributions contracting authority exists.

In view of this great backlog of demand for low-rent units, your committee believes that local housing authorities, in carrying out their responsibilities for determining standards of admission to low-rent housing, should give priority to the needs of families displaced by the construction of public housing, and families whose incomes are below the maximum set for admission to public housing.

Flexible formula for existing housing.—A technical change would be made in the public housing subsidy formula to provide additional flexibility, especially to enable the use of older housing, with or without rehabilitation, for shorter terms than the 30- to 40-year periods required under the existing annual contributions formula. The obstacle to such short-term use does not stem from lack of basic statutory authority on the part of local housing authorities; State laws generally permit local authorities to purchase and lease structures for low-rent use. The principal limitation arises from the Federal annual contributions formula, which establishes a maximum contribution in terms of a specified percentage (the "going Federal rate" plus 2 percent) of the "development or acquisition" cost of a project. Under this formula, use can only be made of housing with an economic life extending over a sufficient period to allow amortization of the capital cost at the statutory rate. This rate was designed to permit amortization of bonded indebtedness over a long period, and the established practice has been to contract for periods of 40 years. Such a period is too long to permit utilization of many kinds of privately owned existing housing.

Under the proposed flexible formula, the annual contribution for an acquired or leased unit could be fixed, as a maximum, at the same dollar amount as the fixed annual contribution under the conventional formula for a newly constructed low-rent housing project consisting of units designed for the comparable number, types, and sizes of families. Because it is not stated in terms of a specific percentage of capital cost, the formula would permit, as an annual contribution, the same number of dollars for each year of low-rent housing use, whether the total period of anticipated use is long or short. This would provide a sufficient annual contribution to house low-income families through the acquisition, or acquisition and rehabilitation, of structures, over whatever period may be appropriate considering the condition and nature of the property, or by the leasing of units for short-term use in meeting particular needs.

Low-rent housing in private accommodations.—The bill establishes a new program of low-rent housing in units leased in privately owned existing structures. This would supplement the housing assisted under other provisions of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 so as to meet the total housing needs of the community.

Under the new program local authorities would undertake an affirmative, orderly program designed to utilize the housing in its community which is suitable or may be made suitable for use as low-rent housing in private accommodations. Each local housing authority which undertakes a program of leasing units in existing housing shall conduct a continuing survey and listing of such available dwelling units, shall invite the owners to make them available for purposes of the program, shall conduct appropriate inspections of the units offered to be made available, and approve units for use in this program.

With respect to these leased units in existing housing, the Public Housing Administration would be authorized to enter into contracts for annual contributions with local housing authorities, the amount of which would be chargeable against the overall authorization provided for the entire low-rent housing program. The local housing authority would enter into contracts with the owners of dwelling units to be leased which would specify the amount of rental and other charges to be received by the owner, and would provide for occupancy by a low-income family whose rental and other charges would be determined in accordance with the standards applicable in the low-rent housing program under the other provisions of the U.S. Housing Act.

The annual contributions payable by PHA for purposes of such housing could not exceed the estimated amount of the fixed annual contribution which would be established for newly constructed units designed to accommodate the comparable number, sizes, and kinds of families. However, where the accommodations are occupied by the elderly, displaced, or handicapped, there could also be payable the additional subsidy of up to $120 per year, as in the case of newly constructed projects.

The reasonable and necessary expenses incurred by a housing authority in conducting its surveys, listings, and inspections for purposes of this program would be allowable as project expenses in determining the amount of annual contributions, but the total amount of annual contributions would be within the limitations just described.

In utilizing low-rent housing in existing private accommodations under this special authorization, not more than 10 percent of the units in any single structure would be used except insofar as the local housing authority determines that such limit should not be applied because of the limited number of units in the structure or for other adequate reason.

In the contracts between the local authorities and the owners of the accommodations, maximum recognition will be given to the interest of the owner insofar as consistent with the purposes of the program. Thus, it is provided that the selection of tenants for the unit and the rental to be received by the owner shall be negotiated and agreed to by the local authority and the owner. Also, the local authority would have the sole right to give notice to vacate, and the owner would have the right to make representations to the local authority for termination of a tenancy. The maintenance and replacements (including redecoration) would have to be in accord with the standard practice for the building, as established by the owner and agreed to by the local authority.

The provisions concerning the parties between whom the contracts and leases shall be made and the procedure for payment of rent and other charges are sufficiently flexible to permit local authorities and owners to implement this program in the most suitable manner under the particular circumstances. Thus, although the arrangement may take the form of a lease from the owner to the local authority with a sublease by the authority to the tenant, and with payment of rent by the tenant to the housing authority and by the housing authority to the owner, other arrangements would also be possible.

The contract between the local authority and the owner would be limited to a term of not less than 12 months and not more than 36 months. However, successive renewals for additional periods of similar length would be authorized, and provision for such renewals could be included in the lease. Such provision may be necessary or desirable, where, for example, an owner is willing to make a substantial investment to improve the property in anticipation of the income to be derived under the contract with the housing authority. We urge both the Public Housing Commissioner and local housing authorities to utilize this new program to the fullest extent practicable.

Use of existing housing.—These new authorizations for lease and purchase which would permit greater utilization of privately owned housing would be particularly useful in areas where there are substantial vacancies in such housing, especially for large families. There are many low-income families in communities where vacancies exist who continue to live in slum conditions because they are unable to pay the economic rent which the vacant properties warrant. These new provisions would permit greater use of the private housing supply, including privately owned housing for the elderly financed under sections 202 and 231 and FHA- and VA-acquired housing, by purchase, purchase and rehabilitation, or lease of privately owned units in individual houses or multifamily structures, where the housing is or can be made suitable for low-rent housing use.

Through the use of such properties, it is also possible to realize other advantages. In many cases, for example, local authorities should be able to provide units more quickly than through new construction and meet more readily the special problems presented by large numbers of low-income displacees. In addition, the provisions should give local authorities greater flexibility in providing housing for different kinds of families, as in obtaining units for larger families and providing conveniently located units for elderly families. A further advantage could be the effect of broadened use of privately owned structures in the "gray" areas where such use could encourage the conservation and improvement of residential properties. Any housing used in the program would have to be brought into full compliance with local code requirements and be able to meet the basic statutory standards of decent, safe, and sanitary housing.

Your committee believes these provisions involving acquisition or lease of privately owned housing constitute a very valuable supplement to the basic program of new construction. Privately owned housing can be effectively used for low-income families where a combination of certain conditions exist. There must first be a supply of vacant housing on the local market, and that housing must freely be made available, since eminent domain will not be used. Moreover, the housing should be appropriately located to serve the needs of the low-income families to be housed. Its cost, design, and physical condition must be appropriate. Also, its use should be consistent with the city plans and renewal programs and in accord with the wishes of the local governing body. Given these conditions, the use of private housing in a community under the proposed formula would benefit not only the low-income families it serves but also the community as a whole and the private residential market.

Parity of treatment for the handicapped and elderly in low-rent housing.—Parity of treatment between the handicapped and the elderly for low-rent housing purposes would be provided by extending to the handicapped the advantages of certain provisions presently applicable to the elderly. Thus, the units occupied by the handicapped would be eligible for the special contribution of up to $120 per year presently authorized for units occupied by the elderly and displacees. The maximum room cost limits would also be increased by $1,000 with respect to housing designed specifically for the handicapped, as is presently provided in the case of housing designed for the elderly.

Removal of 20-percent gap requirement.—The bill would eliminate the requirement that there be a 20-percent gap between the upper rental limits for admission to a low-rent housing project and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing a substantial supply of standard housing. Previous laws have already eliminated the 20-percent gap requirement for the displaced and the elderly. It is inequitable to exclude any income group from the advantages of the program when they cannot afford housing provided by private enterprise.

Burden of assessments.—In the building of public housing projects, particularly those in expanding metropolitan areas, there is often a necessity to install vastly increased utility and sewage lines. Under the cooperation agreements which the Public Housing Administration obtains from various local governments as a prerequisite to entering into an annual contributions contract with them, it is generally provided that the cost of such installations will be borne by the city.

It has again been brought to the attention of the committee that often this results in overly heavy assessments being made against adjacent small taxpayers in order that the cost, which the city has undertaken to pay through the cooperation agreement, may be met. This is an unjust assessment of the adjacent small taxpayer from which he derives no increased value or service. It was expressed as the opinion of the committee in its report on the Housing Act of 1964, and it remains the opinion of the committee, that this matter should be more fully considered by both the Public Housing Administration and the municipalities concerned in order that a more just and equitable arrangement may be set up.

One approach to this problem would be for the Public Housing Administration to make funds available for the installations referred to above, with arrangements being made for repayment of this amount from the payment in lieu of taxes which the local housing authority makes to the city. In any event, the committee again wishes to call to the attention of the Public Housing Administration that the situation described above, wherein the heavy burden of paying for the new installation falls on small taxpayers, particularly homeowners, should not be allowed to continue.

Direct loans to provide housing for the elderly or handicapped

One of the most urgent needs in the field of housing is the provision of suitable accommodations for our elderly citizens. This older age group is growing more rapidly than the population as a whole and, generally speaking, its incomes are substantially lower. To meet this need the Congress in the Housing Act of 1959 authorized a program of direct low-interest-rate loans to nonprofit corporations to build housing for the elderly. There has been a rapidly growing interest in the program.

The committee has great faith in the usefulness of this program and has removed the existing dollar limitation on the authorization for appropriation of funds and authorized such additional funds to be appropriated as are needed to carry out the program. In order to give the committee and Congress the opportunity to continually evaluate the experience under the program, the authority to make loans would expire on October 1, 1969.

In addition, consistent with your committee's intention not to permit the erratic fluctuations of arbitrary interest rate formulas to frustrate desirable programs, the bill would impose a ceiling of 3 percent on the interest rate applicable to loans under this program. Should the existing statutory interest rate formula produce a lower interest rate, that rate would apply.

The present program lending rate (based on the existing statutory interest rate formula) is 3¾ percent and would rise to 4 percent on June 30, 1965. The bill by reducing the interest rate to 3 percent would have the effect of reducing the monthly debt service on a typical $12,000 dwelling unit from $44.57 to $38.87.

Rehabilitation grants to homeowners in urban renewal areas

The bill would authorize grants to low-income homeowners in urban renewal areas to finance repairs and improvements necessary to bring their homes up to certain standards. These would be standards for decent, safe, and sanitary housing established by the local housing code or the urban renewal plan for the area.

These grants would be used only in hardship cases, generally to avoid displacement of homeowners who have no other means of financing repairs and improvements which must be made to their homes. The amount of a grant (which would be made from urban renewal capital grant funds) could not exceed $1,500.

The bill would permit grants to an individual or family whose annual income is not more than $2,000 in an amount not in excess of the lesser of (1) the actual and approved cost of the repairs and improvements, or (2) $1,500.

In the case of an individual or family with an annual income in excess of $2,000, there would be the additional requirement that the grant could only cover that portion of the necessary repairs and improvements which could not be paid for with a loan which could be amortized, along with that individual's or family's other monthly housing expense, with 25 percent of its monthly income. This limitation would require most individuals and families with incomes over $2,000 to finance the cost of such repairs and improvements with loans. In some cases these loans can be obtained through private financing. For those unable to afford and obtain private financing on reasonable terms, direct 3-percent-interest loans would be made available under the provisions of section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964.

Repairs and improvements for which grants authorized by this section could be made available include the repair or replacement of plumbing facilities, such as piped hot and cold running water, hot water heaters, flush toilets, or bathtubs, and such other basic rehabilitation work as is necessary to bring the dwelling unit up to the standards for decent, safe, and sanitary housing established by the applicable codes or the urban renewal plan for the area.

Successful execution of an urban renewal rehabilitation project requires bringing all the property in the area up to standard. If homeowners cannot bring their property up to the required standards, it must be acquired and either rehabilitated or torn down by the local public agency. At present, many low-income homeowners cannot afford repairs and improvements necessary to bring their property up to the required standards. The rehabilitation grants authorized by the bill would help these people to stay in their upgraded homes as well as help to achieve more successfully neighborhoodwide rehabilitation and conservation objectives.

Most important, the grant would help reduce the displacement of longtime residents who would otherwise be required to seek some other place to live where it might be hard for them to adjust and more expensive to the Government to relocate them.

TITLE II—FHA INSURANCE OPERATIONS

Mortgage insurance for land development

A new title X, "Mortgage Insurance for Land Development," would be added to the National Housing Act. The new title would provide FHA mortgage insurance of private loans to private subdivision developers who may or may not themselves be homebuilders. This will encourage the provision of a larger supply of properly planned and improved residential building sites. It is expected that the mortgage insurance device, which has proven so helpful in providing a stimulus to the construction of good homes, will prove equally helpful in providing a stimulus to the production of good building sites in good neighborhoods.

The availability of FHA credit assistance during the land development stage will enable private developers to provide a more steady supply of improved building sites in an orderly and more economical manner. It should also open up cheaper suburban land for well-planned development and help to combat the rapid rise of prices for homebuilding sites.

The new assistance to land development that would be authorized by the new title X would help provide the improved land needed for many of these dwellings. The activities financed with aid under the title involve substantial capital requirements which the mortgage insurance would assist in meeting.

One of the most persistent problems of the small builder (who may wish to build perhaps 10 or 20 houses a year) is the difficulty of securing a steady supply of reasonably priced improved building lots. They simply do not have the cash or credit facilities or even the time needed to undertake a land purchase and land improvement program to supply them with an even flow of good building sites in well-planned large subdivisions. The homebuilding industry as a whole is finding it increasingly important to market houses on the basis that the entire neighborhood or the entire new subdivision will provide unusual attractions for the home buyer. This trend in the industry becomes increasingly apparent every building season. Unless small home builders participate in this trend, the danger of their being squeezed out of the market will increase.

The proposed new program of FHA mortgage insurance for land development would be helpful to small builders in a number of ways, and the bill (sec. 1008 of the new title X) requires the Federal Housing Commissioner to administer it with this aim in mind. Basically, this program is a form of credit assistance which would open additional and more generous sources of credit to many types of persons engaged in providing desirable improved building sites. It would also open cheaper land to good, well-planned development. For example, under this provision, the small builder could join with other small builders to acquire and jointly develop a site commensurate with their combined needs and capacities for one or more years of home construction. The ability to pool equity, and the eligibility of fees for professional services under the land development mortgage, would enable the small builders to retain competent technical land development staff for the joint operation. Each builder could, however, retain his individual building and sales operation with respect to his own lots within the larger project.

Another way in which small builders may participate is by purchasing the desired number of contiguous lots from land developers who are not themselves home builders. Without the benefit of FHA credit assistance, such land developers are often forced (especially when mortgage funds become tight) to obtain credit backing or other participation from large- or medium-size home builders in order to enable the land developers to obtain the funds with which to prepare sites in a large subdivision. In return for such backing or other participation, the land developer must normally make firm commitments to the participating home builders under which the latter will have first choice of the best blocks of improved lots, thus leaving random and inferior lots, if any, to smaller builders. The availability of FHA mortgage insurance will in very many cases make it unnecessary for land developers to make such advance commitments to large- and medium-size builders. Instead, the land developer can carry the site preparation stage with the insured FHA mortgage loan; sell lots on the free market; and thereby make additional improved lots available to smaller builders.

The increased availability of credit for rational and orderly development of well-planned suburban subdivisions would result in an increased supply of improved building lots at cheaper prices for all builders. Thus, the benefits to smaller builders would not be at the expense of medium-size and larger builders, but rather would result from overall increased production of good building sites for the market as a whole.

The activities financed under the title would include the acquisition of land and its improvement with water and sewer facilities, roads, streets, sidewalks, storm drainage facilities, and other site improvement work.

(a) Authority to issue mortgage insurance commitments under the title would expire on October 1, 1969.

(b) The mortgagor could not be a public body, thereby limiting the program to private land development.

(c) The insured mortgage loan could not exceed the lesser of (1) 75 percent of the Federal Housing Commissioner's estimate of the value of the property as of the completion of land development or (2) the sum of 50 percent of his estimate of the value of the land before development and 90 percent of his estimate of the cost of the site improvements. The insured mortgage amount outstanding could at no time exceed $12,500,000.

(d) The maximum mortgage maturity would be 7 years, and the committee expects the FHA Commissioner to set the lowest practicable ceilings on interest rates and premium payments.

(e) The project would be required to represent a good mortgage insurance risk. That is, the risk should be acceptable to the FHA in view of the purpose of the program to provide credit assistance only for well-planned land development which contributes to sound and economic urban growth.

(f) The improvements and the development plan would be required to comply with all applicable State and local governmental requirements and with FHA's standards. The land development schedule would in all cases contemplate development within the shortest reasonable period consistent with sound development, and the development plan for the site would be required to be consistent with a comprehensive plan which covers, or with comprehensive planning being carried on for, the area in which the land is situated.

(g) All land development plans would also be required to be acceptable to the Federal Housing Commissioner as providing reasonable assurance that the land development will contribute to good living conditions in the area being developed, and that such area (i) will have a sound economic base and a long economic life, (ii) will be characterized by sound land use patterns, and (iii) will include or be served by such shopping, school, recreational, transportation, and other facilities as the Commissioner deems adequate or necessary.

The Commissioner would be required to adopt suitable requirements to encourage the maintenance of a diversified local home building industry, broad participation by builders, and the inclusion of a proper balance of housing for families of moderate or low income.

The land after development would normally be expected to be served by public systems of water supply and sewerage. These would be consistent with other existing or prospective systems within the area. If the Commissioner finds that a public system is not feasible he may, under such assurances as he may require with respect to eventual public ownership and operation, approve an adequate privately or cooperatively owned system. Such a system would be required to be regulated in a manner acceptable to the Commissioner to protect the interest of consumers as to user rates and charges and methods of operation and also as to terms of any sale or transfer of the systems.

The bill also contains a requirement for certification by the mortgagor of actual development costs to be made from time to time to assure that the outstanding balances of loans insured under the title during the course of land development will be appropriately limited to reflect both the actual costs of development and the release of improved parcels from the lien of the mortgage. The committee expects this to be administered stringently to prevent any "mortgaging out."

Further study needed on "new communities" proposal.—The committee gave special attention to the proposal contained in the administration bill that would have authorized a special program of land insurance for entire new communities but felt that further study was required, and it is not contained in H.R. 7984. Testimony in the hearings indicated that there is still considerable controversy over the plan and experts differ in their evaluation. The Subcommittee on Housing plans to undertake a closer study of this proposal later this year.

The elimination of the administration's "new community" proposal enabled the committee to reduce the total cost of the bill by $500 million by eliminating the need for this much of the additional FNMA special assistance authorization provided for in title VII of the bill.

Mortgage insurance for housing

Extension of insurance authorizations.—The provisions of title II of the bill would continue for 4 years (from the present termination date of October 1, 1965, to October 1, 1969) FHA's authority to

(1) insure property improvement loans under its title I program, and
(2) insure housing loans and mortgages under all of its other programs, except the section 221 program for low- and moderate-income housing which is continued by title I of the bill.

Reducing financing costs.—The committee is concerned about practices which result in increasing the cost of home financing to the consumer. On FHA-insured mortgages which bear a reasonable interest rate and which provide a guarantee of the investment, the practice of selling mortgages at a discount should be discouraged. These discounts add to the cost of housing for the consumer. Discounts can make the difference between a family's ability to afford a decent home and its inability to afford this necessity.

Unlike reasonable fees of mortgagees for services for financing work, discounts are an additional charge for the financing itself. The committee requests the Housing and Home Finance Agency to develop a program to discourage the practice of discounts where FHA-insured mortgages on homes are being sold at the current interest rate of 5¼ percent, which is a reasonable return. It should assure that the savings are passed on to the consumer. If the Housing and Home Finance Agency does not have adequate legislative authority to cope with this problem, the committee requests it to submit recommendations for such new legislative authority as is needed.

The committee strongly supports the continuing objective of keeping interest rates at reasonable levels. The Housing Agency should be constantly on the alert to avoid increases in interest rates. Such increases cause housing costs to go up, so that families are unable to obtain decent homes which they could afford if interest rates were kept down.

The level of interest rates is crucial to the success of the various Federal housing programs. Interest rates are manmade and, as such, are controlled by man. Further, the interest rates which the Federal Government has to pay on its obligations determines the floor under which private interest rates will not fall. Since World War II, interest rates paid by the Federal Government have continued to rise to where now they are at a 30-year high. If proper action is not taken on the part of responsible officials to maintain reasonable interest rates to assure, in this instance, success of the federally sponsored housing program, then an alternative must be found or the program is doomed to failure.

Since the cost of Federal financing has continued to rise, and since several specific housing programs carried an interest rate which, by and large, varied with the Federal cost of money, these programs have become jeopardized. It is for this reason that your committee believes its action to substitute a 3-percent interest rate on several of the Federal housing programs is fully justified.

If the new interest rate formula now contained in this housing legislation is not enough to provide a sustained program, then in order to meet the objectives of this housing legislation a direct subsidy for the various federally supported housing programs may be in order. As another alternative, serious consideration should be given to a direct financing program for housing using the Federal Reserve System as a source of funds. This could be accomplished without in any way creating any inflationary pressures.

Basic, however, to any program such as this, or more broadly to general economic prosperity, is a policy which provides for an adequate money supply at reasonable interest rates. If this proper atmosphere cannot be provided and sustained, then no program—be it housing or otherwise—can be accomplished.

Apart from the interest rates on single-family homes, the committee expresses its concern about the interest rates on mortgages on multifamily housing. For many years, there had been a differential of one-half of 1 percent between the interest rate on mortgages on multifamily housing as compared with mortgages on individual homes. This differential reflected the lower servicing charges and the lower initiating costs on multifamily housing mortgages, along with the greater attraction of such mortgages to many institutional and other investors. At the present time, the interest rate on multifamily housing mortgages insured by FHA is the same rate of $5\frac{1}{4}$ percent as the interest rate on individual home mortgages, so we are not getting the differential and saving which had long prevailed.

The committee requests the Housing Agency to encourage a reduction in the interest rates on multifamily housing mortgages which are FHA insured. Such a reduction will bring housing within the financial reach of more families. The Federal Housing Administration and the Federal National Mortgage Association should cooperate in developing a program to achieve this reduction. This is most readily achievable on those multifamily housing mortgages which are eligible for purchase from special assistance funds under existing legislation.

Multifamily mortgage limits for four or more bedroom units.—An increased dollar limitation would be permitted on the amount of an FHA-insured mortgage financing multifamily housing with dwelling units consisting of four or more bedrooms. The amount of the increase would range from $2,250 to $2,500 per family unit.

Prior to the Housing Act of 1964, FHA was able to recognize additional rooms almost without limit as to number in the statutory per room multifamily mortgage limits. While the former per room limits too often led to superfluous additional rooms to the detriment of design, they did permit the recognition of the cost of additional bedrooms. It was found, in working with the new family unit limitations added by the 1964 Housing Act, that these new limitations do not contain adequate provisions for financing projects with large units having four or more bedrooms. For this reason, an increased dollar limitation for four or more bedroom units has been included in the bill. This increased dollar limitation would enable the added cost of large units to be reflected in the maximum mortgage amount, and encourage production of accommodations for larger families where needed.

Rehabilitation in urban renewal areas.—More rehabilitation of housing for rent in urban renewal areas would be encouraged by removing an obstacle which unduly restricts the use of the FHA section 220 urban renewal housing program as it applies to non-occupant owners of 1- to 11-family structures. A nonoccupant mortgagor who intends to hold 1- to 11-family housing for rent would be entitled to a larger loan amount more consistent with the amount given a mortgagor holding larger multifamily units for rent. The amendments would liberalize and make section 220 more workable for financing the construction, purchase, or rehabilitation of housing in urban renewal areas.

Section 220 of the National Housing Act would be amended (1) to increase the maximum amount of a mortgage which can be insured where the mortgagor is not an occupant of the property and intends to hold it for rent, and (2) where refinancing is involved, to permit existing indebtedness for improvement of the property to be included in the computation of the amount of a mortgage whether or not the indebtedness is secured by a mortgage against the property. Under existing law, only indebtedness secured by the property may be included in the insured mortgage.

Under the bill, a nonoccupant mortgagor could obtain an insured loan for rehabilitation, purchase, or construction of a 1- to 11-family property for rent in an amount which is 93 percent (now 85 percent) of the amount that an owner-occupant of the property could receive. In no case involving refinancing of housing to be rented could the mortgage amount exceed the estimated rehabilitation cost plus refinancing. Under existing law, an owner-occupant may obtain a rehabilitation loan which neither exceeds (1) 97 percent of the first $15,000 of the sum of estimated rehabilitation cost and estimated value before rehabilitation, plus 90 percent of such sum in excess of $15,000 but not in excess of $20,000, plus 75 percent of the sum in excess of $20,000, nor (2) the estimated cost of rehabilitation plus the amount required to refinance the outstanding debt secured by the property. For new construction, the loan can be up to 97 percent of $15,000 or estimated replacement cost, plus 90 percent of cost above $15,000 but not above $20,000, plus 75 percent of the cost above $20,000.

Since under the bill a nonoccupant mortgagor could obtain 93 percent of the amount that could be obtained under either of these formulas, the amount he would obtain would in effect be approximately 90 percent of the value or replacement cost of the property, depending upon the formula applicable.

Under the present law, a nonoccupant mortgagor of rental housing may obtain a mortgage in an amount only up to 85 percent of that permitted for an owner-occupant. In a case of refinancing and rehabilitation, he may have a substantial equity in the property, but the amount of the mortgage is now limited to 85 percent of the amount needed to refinance and rehabilitate the property. This requires him to increase his cash outlay and equity more than he is willing to do.

Nondwelling facilities for urban renewal rental housing.—A multi-family rental housing project in an urban renewal area (financed with a mortgage insured by FHA under the sec. 220 program) would be permitted to include more nondwelling facilities financed by the mortgage than under existing law.

Under existing law, the mortgage on such a project can cover nondwelling facilities such as stores, restaurants, garages, beauty parlors, doctors' offices, etc., which are judged to be necessary to serve the occupants of the project or other housing in the neighborhood. General office space and space to be leased to commercial facilities which would serve a wider area than could be considered "the neighborhood," cannot be included in a project. Under the bill, the Federal Housing Commissioner could permit such nondwelling facilities to be included in the project as he deems desirable and consistent with the urban renewal plan. However, the project would have to remain predominantly residential, and the Commissioner would also have to find that any nondwelling facilities included in the project would contribute to the economic feasibility of the project.

A problem in obtaining tenants for a project in an urban renewal area has been that prospective tenants will not move into an area that does not offer the wide variety of goods and services that might be found in an already established area. In many instances, prospective tenants for an urban renewal area housing project would expect to find not only groceries, beauty parlors, and restaurants but also the wider variety of stores and services such as banks, lawyers' offices, doctors' offices, and chain mercantile establishments, which can be found in many of today's suburban shopping centers. These shopping areas are designed to serve rather large areas and offer many of the services formerly found only in the downtown areas.

In order to support stores and other services geared to servicing an area larger than "the neighborhood," these stores and services cannot rely entirely on the limited spending of housing tenants in the immediate area.

Under this proposal, in cases where it can be shown to be economically feasible and necessary to the economic success of the initial housing projects in an urban renewal area, the FHA could insure projects which would be predominantly for housing but which could include stores and office space. In this way, the time between initial and self-supporting occupancy of a housing project could be substantially shortened. Also, this type of undertaking, where desirable, would serve the better interests of the urban renewal area as a whole.

Larger insured mortgages for servicemen.—The limit on the amount of an FHA section 222 insured mortgage financing the home of a serviceman in the Armed Forces or the Coast Guard would be increased from $20,000 to $30,000. This larger maximum mortgage has been requested by the Department of Defense. The downpayments required would be the same as those required under FHA's regular section 203(b) home mortgage insurance program.

Under the present provisions of section 222 of the National Housing Act, a mortgage cannot exceed $20,000 in amount. Housing construction costs and related expenses of homeownership have increased. The effective incomes of many career military members have also been increased by changes in the military compensation system. In high cost areas in particular, the $20,000 limit does not provide an adequate or appropriate home.

Refinancing of insured mortgages.—An omission in existing law would be corrected by the bill by giving FHA the same authority to insure mortgages executed for the purpose of refinancing existing mortgages insured under any FHA-insured mortgage program as is now available for mortgages insured under sections 220, 221, 903, and 908, and certain mortgages insured under section 608.

The principal amount of a refinancing mortgage is limited to the original principal amount and the term cannot go beyond the unexpired term of the existing mortgage, except that where the Commissioner determines an additional term will inure to the benefit of FHA, the refinancing mortgage may have a term of not more than 12 years in excess of the unexpired term of the existing mortgage.

This refinancing authority serves a useful purpose in assisting mortgagors who encounter financial difficulties, especially those owning multifamily housing projects. It also serves to protect the interests of the mortgagee and of the FHA in marginal cases where the alternative to refinancing may be default and foreclosure.

Consolidation of insurance funds.—As a means of streamlining accounting procedures, with substantial economies in operations both in Washington and the field offices, all existing FHA insurance funds would be consolidated by the bill into two funds; namely, a mutual mortgage insurance fund and a general insurance fund. The mutual mortgage insurance fund would continue to cover the insurance under FHA's regular section 203 home mortgage insurance program. All other insurance funds and accounts would be consolidated under a single insurance fund, the general insurance fund, except for a special fund for management-type cooperatives (discussed below). All title I property improvement loans would be registered for insurance, and mortgages under all of FHA's insurance programs would be endorsed for insurance, under the general insurance fund, except those mortgages committed and insured under the regular section 203 home mortgage insurance program and the mortgages of management-type cooperatives insured under section 213. The assets and liabilities of all of the current funds and accounts except the mutual mortgage insurance fund would be transferred to and become the responsibility of the general insurance fund.

This consolidation would reduce from 15 to 3 the number of monthly entries to be accounted for and later consolidated into a combined balance sheet and statement of income and expense. It would substantially reduce FHA's field reporting expenses.

Your committee has been assured that after consolidation FHA would still be able to compute with reasonable accuracy the financial experience of individual programs, as the need might arise.

Mutuality for management-type cooperatives.—A mutual mortgage insurance fund would be established by the bill for FHA's mortgage insurance program for management-type cooperatives. Sales-type cooperatives, where a nonprofit cooperative builds single-family homes for sale to its members, would not be included in the new fund. Also, a mortgage financing an investor-sponsor cooperative, built for sale to a cooperative, would not be included in the new fund unless the project is, in fact, sold to a management-type cooperative. The sales-type cooperative and investor-sponsor projects that are not sold to a cooperative would be carried as the obligation of FHA's general insurance fund.

Under the amendment, a cooperative management housing insurance fund in the amount determined necessary by the Federal Housing Commissioner would be created with funds transferred from the general insurance fund. There would also be established in the new fund a general surplus account and a participating reserve account. The aggregate net income or any net loss sustained by the management fund would be credited or charged to the appropriate account in accordance with sound actuarial and accounting practices.

The Commissioner would be authorized, when the status of the participating reserve account makes it appropriate, to distribute to a cooperative housing borrower, under a mortgage insured under the proposed new mutual fund, a share of the account in such manner and amount as the Commissioner determines to be equitable and in accordance with sound actuarial and accounting practices. The distributable share could be paid to the borrower either upon termination of the insurance obligation or at such time or times prior to insurance termination as the Commissioner may determine. The aggregate amount of the distributable shares paid to a borrower could not exceed the aggregate amount of premiums paid by the borrower for the loan insurance. Also, no distributable share could be paid until any amount which may be transferred to the general surplus account from the general insurance fund has been repaid.

To be eligible for mutuality, a cooperative mortgage would be required to meet one of the following requirements:

1. The mortgage would have to be insured pursuant to a commitment issued on or after the enactment of this proposed new section or insured pursuant to a previously issued commitment which is transferred to the new cooperative management housing insurance fund.

2. If the mortgage was insured prior to the enactment of the proposed new section, the mortgage insurance would have to be transferred to the new fund.

The transfer of mortgage insurance or a commitment to the new fund would require the written consent of the mortgagee, and the Commissioner would require that evidence of this consent be filed within a prescribed time after the enactment of the proposed new section. Mortgage insurance or commitments could not be transferred to the new fund if the mortgage is in default and the mortgagee has indicated it will file a claim for insurance benefits.

Mortgages insured under section 213 prior to the enactment of this new section which are not transferred to the new fund would continue to be insured under the general insurance fund. Also, section 213 mortgages already assigned to the Commissioner or property conveyed to the Commissioner pursuant to such mortgages would continue to be obligations of the general insurance fund.

Optional cash payment of insurance benefits.—The bill would authorize the Federal Housing Commissioner to provide, at his option, on or after enactment of the bill, for the payment in cash (in lieu of debentures) of insurance benefits under all or a portion of FHA's insurance programs. The authority to issue debentures instead of paying cash would not be repealed (in programs where debentures are now used) and the Commissioner could use this authority if he determined at any time it is necessary to discontinue cash payments.

In those cases where commitments to insure were issued prior to the enactment of the bill, the mortgagees would be entitled to receive debentures, and settlement of their claim could be made in debentures if they so request. Insurance claims in cases where the commitment is issued after the enactment of the bill would be paid either in cash or in debentures at the option of the Commissioner.

Cash payments under this new authority would be in an amount equivalent to the face amount of the debentures that would have been issued, plus an amount equivalent to the interest which the debentures would have earned, computed to a date established by the Commissioner. In a case where a mortgagee, under his mortgage insurance contract, is entitled to receive debentures, the mortgagee would still be entitled to receive payment in debentures rather than in cash if the mortgagee does not want to accept a cash payment. Mortgagees filing insurance claims on mortgages insured under the section 220, 221, or 233 programs (urban renewal housing, low- or moderate-income housing, and experimental housing) after the Housing Act of 1961, now have in their insurance contracts the right to a cash insurance settlement. Also, lenders insuring home improvement loans under sections 203(k) and 220(h) have the right to receive cash insurance benefits.

The present procedure of issuing, reissuing, and redeeming debentures involves considerable administrative expense both to FHA and the Treasury Department. Also, the printing of the forms used for debentures is costly. Your committee has been informed that the discontinuance of issuing debentures and the adoption of a plan for paying all insurance claims in cash would result in estimated annual administrative savings of $300,000 to the Treasury, and of $265,000 to FHA, or a total of over a half million dollars annually.

In addition, there will be some interest saving due to the fact that FHA will save the difference between the higher interest rate it pays on debentures and the interest increment it receives on invested funds.

Present FHA forecasts indicate that net receipts through 1969 will be sufficient to pay all mortgage insurance claims in cash. However, in order to be assured of sufficient funds at all times with which to make such payments, the Commissioner would need and the bill would provide authority to borrow from the U.S. Treasury such amounts as he determines from time to time. The Treasury loans would bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary, taking into consideration the average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities during the month preceding the issuance of the obligations evidencing the loans. Of course, this borrowing authority would be used in place of the U.S. guarantee on the debentures which would otherwise be issued, and would have the same budgetary effect as issuing debentures.

FHA mortgage financing for veterans.—A new FHA home mortgage insurance program would be created by the bill for veterans. This program would be available to all persons who served in the active military, naval, or air service, and who have been discharged or released under conditions other than dishonorable. Persons who have served in the military either during peacetime or wartime would be eligible for the financing provided by this section. The only veterans not eligible would be those who have already received a GI loan for purchasing, constructing, or repairing their home.

The mortgages would be limited to $30,000 and cover one-family residences. The mortgage amount would be determined on the basis of 100 percent of the first $20,000 of the Commissioner's estimated value of the property, and 85 percent of such value in excess of $20,000. Thus a veteran could buy up to a $20,000 home with no downpayment.

Mortgage limits for homes in outlying areas under FHA's section 203(i) program.—The FHA section 203(i) program for housing in outlying areas would be amended by increasing the mortgage limits from their present $11,000 to $12,500. This increase would enable the program to further extend its benefits to rural-type housing and provide financing which meets the increased costs of present day construction.

Proximity to airports

It was brought to the attention of the committee that in some areas homeowners are suffering substantial hardship because of construction of nearby airports after they built or acquired their homes. In such cases, the construction or expansion of the airports often sharply reduces the value of the housing because of noise, nuisance, and potential hazards. Most private lenders are reluctant to finance, and FHA will not insure, loans on houses in these circumstances, except at substantially reduced market values. Owners who suffer this depreciation in the value of their property now must go to court and sue the airport or the city for damages to attempt to recover the difference in value before airport construction or expansion and afterward.

The proposal was made to the committee that we include an amendment which would require FHA to appraise existing single-family homes adversely affected by airports at a valuation determined as if there were no adverse influences caused by the proximity to the airport. The proposal called for appraising prospective purchasers that the valuation had been arrived at without regard to airport influences and, in recognition of the fact that FHA would be exposed to unusual risks, the proposal would have set up a special reserve for losses for loans in this category.

FHA objected to the proposal because it would be a departure from their usual underwriting standards. However, the committee is deeply concerned over the hardship suffered by homeowners in this category. With the increase in aviation activities throughout the Nation, similar hardships will affect a great many homeowners in the future. For this reason, the committee strongly urges the FHA Commissioner to review his present policies and procedures in order to make every effort to enable FHA financing to reduce the economic loss suffered by these homeowners in the event they sell their homes.

We further urge the FHA Commissioner, in the event that additional legislation is needed, to prepare whatever amendments are necessary to achieve the objectives we seek and furnish them to the committee as soon as practicable, hopefully in order that a just solution may be devised with minimum delay. The committee also believes that the most direct and equitable solution may well be to establish a fund for the payment of damages arising from airport construction or expansion under the Federal Airport Act, reflecting the fact that these damages are properly a cost of that program. Hearings will be announced later this year by the Subcommittee on Housing which plans to look into this and related problems more closely.

TITLE III—URBAN RENEWAL

Increase in authorization for capital grants

Your committee has included the full amount of the increase in capital grant authorization requested by the Administration. The bill would increase the aggregate amount of new obligational authority for urban renewal grants by $2.9 billion. Of this amount $675 million would become available upon enactment of the bill, $725 million would become available July 1, 1966, and $750 million on July 1 in each of the years 1967 and 1968. This new authority would permit a high level of urban renewal activity over a period of 4 years. It is geared to available local resources for financing and carrying out projects during this period.

The need for the urban renewal program is very great. Its increasing acceptance is evidenced by widespread use—both by large and small cities in every part of the United States.

The committee recognizes that in spite of the widespread use of the urban renewal program and its many notable achievements, a serious problem of urban blight remains. The cities are caught in a vicious circle. They cannot, unaided, afford to carry out slum clearance, yet their slums are sapping their vitality and financial strength. It is unrealistic to expect cities to have sufficient resources to eliminate their slums entirely on their own. Only with the aid of the Federal Government can most slum clearance projects be carried out.

Study of housing and building codes, zoning, tax policies, and development standards

Time and again this committee has been advised that local housing and building laws, codes, or regulations make it exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, for builders to produce low-cost housing. Similarly, it has been asserted from time to time that zoning and land use laws and regulations thwart private initiative in undertaking comprehensive urban renewal projects. And it has been said that tax policies contribute to the perpetuation of slum areas.

Over the years these contentions and charges have been levied, but little, if any, evidence has been accumulated to support or refute them. To shed some light on such matters, the bill would direct the Housing Administrator to conduct a study of housing and building laws, codes, standards, and regulations, zoning and land use laws, codes, and regulations, and Federal, State, and local tax policies and to submit a report to the President and the Congress within 18 months after funds are appropriated for the study.

The general objective of the study would be to determine how local property owners and private enterprise can be encouraged to serve as large a part of the total housing and building need as they can and how Federal, State, and local governmental assistance can be directed so as to enable them to serve a larger part of such need.

More specifically, the committee would expect the Administrator to conduct studies on such matters as (a) the development of performance standards for building codes, (b) methods for simplifying building codes, and (c) achieving greater uniformity among local building codes. It is expected that he would examine the effects of zoning and land use laws and regulations on housing and development patterns and costs.

In the tax area, the studies would be expected to deal with such subjects as (1) the depreciation allowance for property owners under the Federal corporate income tax, (2) an appropriate tax policy for vacant land, (3) appraisals of residential income-producing properties in connection with tax assessments and their relationship to slum properties, and (4) the various types of exemptions from the local property tax.

It is appropriate that the Housing and Home Finance Administrator, in making the studies authorized by section 301, also consider steps which may be taken to prevent aggravation of the conditions already existing in urban areas coming under the purview of this bill. Appropriate to the study are the effects of concentration of Federal activities in urban areas already lacking adequate open space, the bidding of Federal agencies for facilities in already congested areas, and, as alternatives, the expansion of Federal facilities in cities where slums, blight, and sprawl are not likely to be aggravated.

Direct operating costs of Federal agencies are valid factors in determining their location. However, indirect and social Federal costs should also be known. Consequently, it would be appropriate for the HHFA to study the indirect and social costs to the Federal Government of expanding facilities in congested areas, as opposed to placing them in alternative less congested locations. Included in these social costs are blight, slums, and lack of open space due to congestion.

These topics are illustrative of the wide range of subjects that would be examined in reasonable depth by the various studies that would be conducted by the Administrator. With the information developed by these studies, not only the Congress, but the State and city governments themselves, will be better equipped to plan for and develop the institutional and legal framework necessary to encourage local property owners and private enterprise to serve the largest possible part of the total housing and building need.

General neighborhood renewal plans

The committee recognizes that the general neighborhood renewal plan provides an effective tool for the overall planning of large areas afflicted with slums and blight. This type of broad planning provides a basis for the staging of individual urban renewal projects consistent with the resources of the locality. Such staging of urban renewal projects can also be helpful in minimizing the social and economic impact of needed renewal activities on the residents of the area.

However, under existing law, the entire area covered by a general neighborhood renewal plan must be slum or blighted, deteriorated or deteriorating, to the same extent as is required before an urban renewal project can be undertaken in the area. This restriction on including within the general neighborhood renewal plan subareas which are not in themselves so blighted or deteriorated as to require urban renewal activities has, in many instances, prevented the general neighborhood renewal plan from dealing with entire neighborhoods and fragmented the planning process.

The bill would permit the inclusion of such areas which are not in themselves so blighted or deteriorated as to require urban renewal treatment within the general neighborhood renewal plan. This would permit delineation of a GNRP area which may be more appropriate for overall study and planning than merely that portion where urban renewal activities are proposed. It would make possible, for example, study of the street capacities and requirements of an entire neighborhood rather than only those portions of the neighborhood scheduled to receive urban renewal assistance through an urban renewal project or projects.

Use of funds in code enforcement and rehabilitation projects

In his message on the "Problems and Future of the Central City and Its Suburbs," the President emphasized his increasing concern for greater use of code enforcement and rehabilitation to minimize the need for demolition and clearance in urban renewal. The committee shares this concern and believes that a practical way to implement it is to make available for such projects at least 10 percent of the aggregate of (1) the new capital grant authority provided in this bill, and subsequent legislation; and (2) the authorization for low-interest-rate rehabilitation loans authorized under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964 (including such additional funds as may be appropriated).

Your committee would like to stress, of course, that this 10-percent figure is only a minimum. With more emphasis being placed upon rehabilitation and code enforcement, the urban renewal agency may well wish to authorize funds substantially above the 10-percent minimum to encourage rehabilitation and code enforcement activities and avoid, where possible, more costly demolition.

In the Housing Act of 1964, the Congress authorized for the first time Federal assistance to localities for a new type of urban renewal project consisting primarily of code enforcement activities. The committee believes that there must be substantial simplification in the normal procedures and requirements applicable to such projects to facilitate the widespread use of this form of assistance. The committee believes the Housing Agency has the authority and should approve code enforcement projects in areas where deterioration is imminently threatening as a result of code violations even though deterioration has not proceeded to the point where such areas would be considered suitable for designation and treatment as urban renewal areas under the criteria normally applied to other types of urban renewal projects.

Strengthened workable program requirement

The bill would extend and strengthen the present "workable program" requirements under title I of the Housing Act of 1949 to assure that these locally prepared programs provide an adequate basis for evaluating proposals by the locality for assistance for individual urban renewal projects. The committee intends this provision to close the gap which now sometimes exists between the planning and scheduling of individual urban renewal projects and the planning and studies carried on on a communitywide basis in preparing a workable program for community improvement.

To meet the requirement of this provision of the bill that the workable program provide sufficient information for the Housing Administrator to evaluate a particular proposed project, it is the committee's understanding that the workable program should identify blighted or declining neighborhoods in the community, indicate the factors causing the deterioration, and provide a basis for scheduling urban renewal activities of various kinds. At present an application for an individual urban renewal project must carry sufficient evidence showing blight, substandard structures, inappropriate land use and street patterns, and so forth, within the area to indicate that it meets the requirement of existing law. The proposed amendment would require the Administrator to relate this data to the workable program to assure that it is consistent with and will contribute to the community's overall efforts to renew and maintain its physical environment.

It has come to the attention of the committee that a number of projects, particularly in the early years of the program, were not properly scheduled with the result that land which had been acquired and cleared "lay fallow" for an unnecessarily long period of time. Friends and critics of the urban renewal program are in unanimous agreement that this is wasteful and undesirable and every effort should be made to minimize the time between clearance and redevelopment. The Urban Renewal Administration recognizes this problem and is working to overcome it, and one of the main purposes of this amendment to the workable program provisions is to meet this problem.

The committee would like to emphasize, also, that localities neither can nor should be required rigidly to specify the boundaries, timing, or priority of individual projects. There must be room for a reasonable range of decision on the part of a locality with respect to the selection and planning of projects even after preparation of its workable program. The important thing is that each project be consistent with the renewal objectives established in the program and be realistically related to the program of action established by the community after adequate study of its needs and resources.

Rehabilitation loans

The committee believes that the low-interest-rate rehabilitation loan program which it initiated last year will be one of the most significant actions yet taken by the Congress to encourage rehabilitation in the deteriorating areas of our cities. Now that the initial appropriation has been made available, we expect prompt and vigorous administrative action to make these loans available for rehabilitation in urban renewal areas. In line with its belief in the value of this program, the committee has removed the dollar limitation of $50 million on the authorization for appropriation of funds for such loans and authorized such additional funds to be appropriated as are needed to carry out the program. This will permit appropriation of funds commensurate with the Housing Agency's developing experience as to the needs for such loans.

While the committee recommends "open ending" the authorization for appropriations, we would hope that as a minimum the Administration and the Appropriations Committee would permit this program which has such a high potential to operate at a level of at least $100 million annually. This annual rate was recommended in H.R. 6501.

In order to give the committee and the Congress an opportunity to evaluate the experience under this program, the authority to make such loans would expire on October 1, 1969.

Lease guarantees for small-business concerns displaced by urban renewal projects

Section 307 of the bill would amend section 7 of the Small Business Act to provide a new program of lease guarantees for small-business concerns displaced by urban renewal projects. The program would be administered by the Small Business Administration, and an insurance fund would be established to assure payments on the guarantees.

Under this program SBA would be authorized to extend guarantees to owners and lessors of property leased by such displaced small concerns, and to lending institutions financing the construction of such property, against losses which they might sustain as a result of the failure of the small concern to perform a lease in accordance with its terms. Such guarantees could be issued in participation with private surety companies or guarantors, and SBA would be authorized to provide for rules and regulations and for appropriate terms and conditions for the guarantee.

No lease insurance could be granted by SBA unless it found that the small concern was financially sound and efficiently managed, and that there was a reasonable expectation that it would be able to perform its obligations under the lease. Only leases for periods of not more than 10 years would be eligible for such assistance.

The bill would establish an insurance fund for lease guarantees, with initial capitalization provided by transfer of $5 million from SBA's revolving fund. Additionally, persons granted insurance would be required to pay an insurance premium into the fund, in an amount determined by SBA, but not to exceed 1 percent per year of the annual rental (or minimum rental) payable under such lease.

The committee believes that such lease guarantees will be a significant aid to small concerns displaced by urban renewal, to enable them to reestablish their business operations in desirable locations. At present, such concerns often are forced to relocate their operations in unsatisfactory premises, due to their inability to obtain leases of modern or well situated property. Small firms, of course, rarely could afford to buy such property.

This problem is becoming increasingly important, as urban renewal and development projects in metropolitan areas reduce the number and size of older sections of the city. If small concerns displaced from urban renewal areas are unable to obtain leases in modern buildings in new or rebuilt areas, their business prospects are not encouraging. The best business locations and opportunities usually lie in these new and rebuilt areas.

Many such displaced small firms are competent and fully qualified to operate their businesses in these desirable locations if they could obtain the necessary leases. However, landlords of these new buildings, and the institutions financing such construction, commonly are reluctant to lease to small concerns, based in large part on the need for clearly assured rental payment for such premises. The lease guarantee program should be a substantial help in overcoming this obstacle. There are, of course, no similar lease guarantees presently available for small firms from private surety companies.

The existing forms of governmental financial assistance available to small business concerns displaced by urban renewal, such as moving allowances, relocation payments, property compensation, and long-term loans, are all necessary and important. However, they can only be utilized effectively in reestablishing business operations when the small concern is able to obtain satisfactory premises for relocation.

While the committee recognizes that this lease guarantee program may not fully overcome the inclination of landlords who prefer big companies as tenants, it should help to close the gap and would enable many sound and efficient small firms to successfully relocate in modern business premises which would otherwise be unavailable to them.

It is anticipated that all types of displaced small business firms could benefit from such guarantees—manufacturing, wholesaling, and retailing, though the latter category would probably predominate. The program would aid small concerns in becoming tenants in a variety of desirable locations, including modern buildings, in downtown areas, redeveloped areas, industrial parks, shopping centers, and urban renewal areas. Moreover, since the guarantees could only be provided in situations where SBA found that the small concern was fully qualified to conduct the business operation at its new location in accord with the terms of its lease, the program should be able to be self-supporting, while at the same time providing valuable assistance to small business.

Relocation of displacees from urban renewal areas

Your committee has continued to seek ways in which to assure that individuals and families displaced by urban renewal projects will be afforded the opportunity to move to decent, safe, and sanitary housing.

Legislation enacted by the Congress in the Housing Act of 1964 re-emphasized the importance of timely and thorough planning for relocation as a prerequisite for the undertaking of the project, and increased the assistance given to displaced individuals, families, and business concerns.

The 1964 act required each urban renewal project to include a program of relocation assistance for displaced families, individuals, and businesses to determine the needs of displacees for relocation assistance, provide information and assistance to aid in relocation and minimize hardships, and assure coordination of relocation activities with related governmental activities.

The bill would further require that the information to be given displacees as part of the relocation program extend to lists of real estate agencies, brokers, and boards in or near the urban renewal area which deal in residential or business property that might be appropriate for the relocating of displaced individuals, families, and business concerns. It would also require that particular attention be paid to planned or proposed low-rent housing projects to be constructed in or near the urban renewal area so that relocation activities may be effectively coordinated with the construction of such projects.

These requirements would apply to all urban renewal projects involving displacement which receive Federal recognition after the enactment of the bill.

The bill would also provide that, as a condition to receiving further assistance with respect to any urban renewal project involving the displacement of individuals and families, the local public agency undertaking the project must furnish the Administrator satisfactory assurance that it is actually carrying out the relocation program as approved by the Administrator.

Redevelopment in accordance with urban renewal plan

The committee has been concerned with reports that in some cases urban renewal projects have been carried out at variance with the approved urban renewal plan for the project or the Federal aid contract involved. The bill adds a provision to the urban renewal law which will considerably strengthen the authority of the Administrator in such cases. As a condition to the approval of any new contract for loan and grant with any local public agency, the agency would be required to demonstrate, by evidence satisfactory to the Administrator, that all previously approved projects had been or are being carried out in substantial accordance with the official urban renewal plan, and any amendments to the plan, and the Federal-aid contract. The bill would authorize the Administrator, in any case where he finds that there does exist a substantial noncompliance, to require the locality to take all feasible actions to correct the situation and to give assurances that future activities will be carried out in accordance with appropriate plans and contracts.

Limitation on credit for publicly owned parking facilities

In a number of urban renewal projects a portion of the local share of the project cost has been met by the provision of revenue-producing parking facilities which, under section 110(d) of the Housing Act of 1949, are eligible as noncash local grants-in-aid. To the extent that the parking facility serves the urban renewal project area, its cost (or a prorated portion of its cost where the facility serves the urban renewal project and other areas) is allowed without regard to potential revenues which the locality may later derive from the facility.

In a report to Congress in June 1962 the GAO disclosed that—

In connection with certain slum clearance and urban renewal projects, URA has tentatively allowed noncash grant-in-aid credits amounting to $9.3 million for certain land and construction costs applicable to six publicly owned parking facilities. The cities where the facilities are located plan to recover, out of revenues derived from the operations, the entire costs of the parking facilities. The effect of allowing these noncash grants-in-aid will be that the cities will be reimbursed in amounts in excess of the actual costs of the facilities. The entire costs, totaling about $12 million, will be recovered through user charges, and, in addition, about $6 million will be contributed by the Federal Government as a result of the grants-in-aid being included in the project.

The HHFA Administrator advised the Congress at the time that—

* * * special problems have arisen with respect to parking facilities because of the extent to which they are frequently revenue producing and because they provide a service which is often similar to that provided by private enterprise. We believe that these problems would be met by the enactment of * * * draft legislation which would reduce the noncash credit allowable with respect to publicly owned parking facilities by that portion of their total cost which is anticipated to be recovered from revenues.

The committee has, therefore, included in the bill a provision which would reduce the noncash credit allowable with respect to publicly owned parking facilities by that portion of their total cost which is anticipated to be recovered from revenues. Appropriate allowance of noncash local grant-in-aid credit would continue to be authorized in cases where a municipality provides parking facilities at no charge, or at charges that do not cover its costs.

The committee recognizes that the feasibility of some urban renewal projects still in the planning stage may be dependent upon the credits anticipated from proposed parking facilities. It is expected that the Administrator will use discretion in applying this rule to minimize hardship situations which might result from an immediate rigid application of this new provision.

Elimination of overly burdensome procedures

Admittedly, urban renewal is a complex undertaking. For this reason, every effort must be made to assure that the administrative processes are reviewed by the Housing Agency on a continuing basis to assure maximum efficiency and simplicity. The committee is concerned that recent years have seen a tendency for the administrative procedures and requirements, which the local public agencies must follow, to become overly complex. The committee feels that real priority must be given to program simplification and will expect a report on accomplishments in this area within a year after the enactment of the proposed legislation.

TITLE IV—COMPENSATION OF CONDEMNEDS

The committee is aware of the growing number of complaints in recent years questioning the fairness of land acquisition procedures followed by local agencies acquiring land in the course of public improvement programs carried on with the aid of Federal funds. There has been particular concern over the lack of uniformity in the land acquisition procedures followed by such local agencies. The committee believes that it is the responsibility of Congress to assure that programs receiving substantial Federal support are carried out in such a manner as to minimize the hardships which often result from the acquisition of land by eminent domain in the course of federally assisted programs.

The bill would establish uniform land acquisition procedures to be followed in connection with the acquisition of land by eminent domain under certain development programs administered by the Housing and Home Finance Agency. The programs covered would be the public housing program, the urban renewal program, the public facility loan program, the college housing program, the program of direct loans for housing for the elderly, and the open-space land program. As a condition of eligibility for Federal assistance under each of these programs, the applicant (defined as any public body or other agency or nonprofit institution authorized to receive Federal assistance under the program involved) would have to satisfy the Housing Administrator that certain policies will be followed in connection with the acquisition of real property by eminent domain in the course of the program.

For example, before an applicant could initiate any eminent domain proceedings, it would be required to make every reasonable effort to acquire the property by negotiated purchase. Before entering into negotiations, the applicant would appraise the property, permitting the owner an opportunity to accompany the appraiser, and would offer the owner a fair and reasonable price for the property. If only part of an owner's property or an interest less than the fee title is to be acquired, the applicant would be required to give the owner its estimate of the fair value of the property before and after acquisition, the fair value of the part or interest to be acquired, and any damages or benefits resulting or accruing to the remainder as a result of the taking.

In addition, the owner could not be required to surrender possession of his property until the applicant pays him the agreed price or, in those cases where only the amount of the payment to the owner is in dispute, not less than 75 percent of the most recent fair price established by the applicant. This payment would, of course, be applied to the ultimate price for the property established by eminent domain proceedings.

Provision is made for the advancement of Federal funds to the applicant so that it would be able to make this payment before the ultimate price is established by the eminent domain proceedings. Such funds would be advanced as a part of the operation of the program under the same terms and in the same manner as any other cost of a project under the program is financed. It should be made clear, however, that this provision would not authorize any payment to the applicant in addition to the normal Federal share of project costs under the program.

In addition, the bill would provide that no person lawfully occupying real property would be required to surrender possession on account of project activities without at least 90 days' written notice of the date on which these activities are scheduled to begin. It would also prohibit an applicant from advancing or delaying eminent domain in order to compel an owner to accept a designated price for the property. Finally, it would require the applicant to take into account human considerations, including the economic and social effects of the project on those occupying real property in the area, in determining the boundaries of a proposed project.

The bill would also extend the relocation payment provisions presently applicable to the urban renewal and public housing programs to the college and elderly housing programs, the open-space land program, and the public facility loan program. These payments would be financed wholly with Federal funds and would be in addition to any other Federal financial assistance extended under the particular program. However, the payments would not be available for any project receiving financial assistance prior to the enactment of the bill.

In addition, the bill would expand the relocation payment provisions contained in title I of the Housing Act of 1949. It would (1) increase from $1,500 to $2,500 the amount of the relocation adjustment payment authorized to displaced small business concerns, and (2) authorize payments to owners for reasonable and necessary expenses incurred by them in connection with the acquisition of their property for recording fees, transfer taxes, mortgage prepayment penalties, and a pro rata portion of real estate taxes covering a period after transfer of title to the property. The committee believes that the relocation adjustment payment to business concerns authorized by the 1964 act is inadequate, and that it is unreasonable to permit acquisition of property without reimbursing the owner for expenses incurred in transferring title to the property.

The committee also gave consideration to amending the relocation payment provisions of the urban renewal law to include as eligible moving expenses the cost of storing and insuring the personal property of a displacee until he is able to reestablish in permanent quarters. However, the committee concluded that such an amendment was unnecessary. There is sufficient authority under existing law to permit the Housing Administrator to allow reimbursement of such expenses. The committee believes that the costs of storage and insurance of personal property for a period of up to 1 year are clearly a reasonable and necessary moving expense and should be reimbursed. The committee also urges the agency to take into account the reinstallation charges of the fixtures moved.

TITLE V—COLLEGE HOUSING

Increase in authorization for loans

The bill would provide for increases of $300 million in the college housing loan authorization on July 1 of each of the 4 years 1965 through 1968. It would also increase the two separate limitations on the dollar amount of college housing loans which can be outstanding for "other educational facilities" (such as dining halls cafeterias, student centers, and other facilities related to housing) and for the housing of student nurses and interns. The limitation on "other educational facilities" would be increased by $30 million, and the limitation on housing for student nurses and interns by $15 million, on July 1 of each of the years 1965 through 1968.

The authorization for the college housing loan program now totals $2,875 million with ceilings of $295 million for other educational facilities and $220 million for student nurse and intern housing. In addition, loan repayments, bond sales, and net income through the end of March 31, 1965, totaled $147 million, bringing total funds available for commitment to $3,022 million. Through the end of March 31, 1965, a total of 2,393 loans for $2,576 million have been approved under this program. As of that date there were 169 applications for $272 million for which funds had been reserved, bringing the total funds committed to $2,849 million.

Through March 31, 1965, funds committed under the program provide assistance for about 2,570 projects, including housing accommodations for about 661,000 students and faculty (including student nurses and interns) and also 249 projects for related facilities such as student unions, dining halls, and health centers. There have been no defaults under the program in payment of principal and interest.

The Office of Education's college and university enrollment and facilities survey indicates an increase in college enrollments from 5.2 million in 1965 to 6.7 million in 1969, and it is estimated that about 25 percent of the increased enrollment will require college housing accommodations. Your committee believes that a 4-year program will best enable colleges and universities to plan for their requirements in the context of available college housing funds and to proceed with the orderly development and construction of the housing accommodations necessary to meet this flood of new students.

Interest rate on college housing loans

The bill would establish an interest rate ceiling on college housing loans at the lower of (1) 3 percent, or (2) the amount derived under the existing statutory interest rate formula (one-quarter of 1 percent per annum added to the average annual interest rate on all interest-bearing obligations of the United States forming a part of the public debt).

Under the existing statutory interest rate formula the lending rate in the college housing program is currently 3¾ percent and it is expected to rise to 4 percent on June 30, 1965.

The committee is concerned that the existing statutory interest rate formula is producing a program lending rate so high that the assistance intended by the Congress has been greatly reduced.

There is, of course, a direct relationship between the rentals that must be charged to college students for their housing and the rate of interest the colleges must pay for the money borrowed to construct such housing. Typical dormitory quarters financed with money borrowed at 3 percent can be rented to a student for $380 a year—the same quarters financed with money borrowed at a 4-percent rate must be rented for $430 a year.

Participation by new colleges

College enrollment has increased from 1.5 million in 1940 to 5.2 million this year. It is projected to climb to 8.6 million by 1975. The need for additional colleges has been obvious for some time. Yet of approximately 1,400 colleges and universities in the United States, fewer than 100 have been started since 1940. The overwhelming portion of the increased enrollment has been met by expanding existing schools, many of which have reached their absolute limit.

When the college housing program was first passed by Congress in 1950, it was not the intention of Congress that the program be limited to existing colleges. Yet in the 15 years the college housing program has been in existence, the Housing and Home Finance Agency has not financed any housing for a new college. The reason stems from an administrative interpretation limiting the program to accredited institutions. As a college cannot be accredited until it has been in operation several years, this regulation, in effect, bars new colleges since they are caught in the circle of not being able to get into operation without facilities and being unable to get the facilities because they are not in operation.

The committee urges the HHFA to accept in the case of new colleges the certification of the State department of education in which the new college is located that the institution would be a bona fide nonprofit school offering an academic course leading to a degree. This certification should be acceptable for a reasonable period to allow the college to get into full operation.

TITLE VI—COMMUNITY FACILITIES

The purpose of this title of the bill is to provide Federal grant funds to assist communities to construct adequate basic water and sewer facilities needed to promote efficient and orderly growth and development and neighborhood facilities needed to carry on programs of health, recreation, or similar community services.

Need for increased investment in water and sewer facilities

The most pressing problem facing many American communities is the provision of adequate water and sewer facilities. This has been testified to repeatedly in hearings held by our committee in recent years. While the committee finds that local governments have not been able to keep pace with the rising need, it does not intend to imply in any way that local governments have not made every effort to meet their responsibilities. It is widely recognized that our towns and cities are hard pressed to meet their financial responsibilities. Sources of tax revenue are under heavy strain. Moreover, individual government units are at a disadvantage in imposing additional tax burdens because this often has the effect of driving industry and employment to other locations.

This shortage of water and sewer facilities is not only a major impediment to orderly and healthy community growth, but it has a special importance to our objectives in the housing field because of its impact on land prices. The sharp increase in land prices in recent years is one of the most serious problems facing the homebuilding industry. According to a recent study by the National Association of Home Builders, average lot prices over the past 5 years jumped over 60 percent from an average of $2,800 to $4,500. This inflationary rise is not due to a shortage of land as such—our total built-up urban land constitutes only 2 percent of the whole land area of the country—but rather it reflects a shortage of land provided with the public investment in community facilities necessary for residential development.

The special importance of this rapid rise in land costs for housing is the fact that not only does it add directly to the cost of homes but it has a leverage effect because of the rule of thumb that land costs should not exceed one-fifth of the final price of the house. A building site which is overdeveloped or underdeveloped has limited marketability and lenders will reduce their appraisals and the amount of the loan which they will extend on such a property. For example, a builder may put an $8,000 house on a $2,000 lot, but if his land cost jumps to $4,000, he will have to construct a house costing in the neighborhood of $16,000 to obtain maximum mortgage terms and market acceptance. While rising incomes and larger families have been an important factor in the upward trend of housing prices, they are not an adequate explanation for the fact that private industry today is unable to adequately serve the many families of modest income. Moreover, we must prepare for the obvious change in the housing market which will come in the next few years when the well-known "baby boom" of the late 1940's reaches the family forming stage. Between 1945 and 1947, the number of births jumped by 1 million and this will soon be reflected in the housing market as a demand for homes at modest prices. We must prepare now to assure that the homebuilding industry can meet this demand with homes at reasonable prices in well-planned developments.

Grants for water and sewer facilities

The bill would authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to finance 50 percent of the cost of projects for basic public water and sewer facilities.

This grant assistance would be available to all communities large or small. The committee expects the Housing Administrator to take into account the special needs of smaller communities which do not ordinarily have the staff of technicians and experts which would enable them to move quickly under a program of this nature and as a result are not always able to share fully in the benefits. However, HHFA through its Community Facilities Administration now operates the public facility loan program limited to cities of 50,000 population or less with a priority for towns of less than 10,000 people and the agency should draw on the experience under this program to assure that small towns are dealt with on an equal footing with larger cities.

Water facilities would include facilities to store, supply, treat, purify, or distribute safe, potable water for domestic, commercial, and industrial use. Sewer facilities would include sanitary sewer systems for the collection, transmission, and discharge of liquid wastes; storm sewer systems for the collection, transmission, and discharge of storm water caused by rainfall or ground water runoff; and other facilities for the collection and disposal of other categories of wastes. The basic parts of a water or sewer facility for which a grant may be made would include all the parts of the water or sewer facility except household connections and the local collection or distribution laterals.

The grants authorized by this title would be available for projects to expand, enlarge, or improve existing water and sewer facilities but the committee does not intend that the grants be used to finance ordinary repairs or maintenance of existing facilities.

The committee expects that proper regard will be given to established standards to assure that facilities constructed, expanded, or improved with grant assistance under this title are adequate for the maintenance of health and control of water pollution. While the grants under this program would cover a wide range of our needs in the field of basic water and sewer facilities, it is not the intention of the committee that it duplicate the very successful program of grants for waste treatment plants under the Water Pollution Control Act.

No grant could be made for any project unless the Administrator determines that the project is necessary to provide adequate water or sewer facilities for, and will contribute to the improvement of the health or living standards of, the people in the community to be served and the project is (1) designed so that adequate capacity will be available to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area, (2) consistent with a program for a unified or officially coordinated areawide water or sewer facilities system as part of the comprehensively planned development of the area, and (3) necessary to orderly community development. Prior to July 1, 1968, grants, in the discretion of the Administrator, could be made if a program for an areawide water and sewer facility system is under active preparation but not yet completed, if the facility for which assistance is sought can reasonably be expected to be required as part of such program, and there is an urgent need for the facility.

The areawide system for basic water and sewer facilities would be required to be a part of the comprehensively planned development of the area. The requirement that a basic water and sewer facility assisted with a grant be part of a unified or officially coordinated areawide water or sewer facility system would assure that Federal grant funds do not finance uncoordinated or fractionated water or sewer facilities. Where there are no existing areawide water or sewer systems, your committee expects that the Administrator would require, as a condition to a grant for a single, independent water or sewer project, that the project be designed so that it can be linked with other independent water or sewer facilities or a proposed areawide system.

In addition, requiring that the areawide water or sewer facility be related to the comprehensively planned development of the area would assure that grant funds available under the proposal would be available only for facilities which help promote orderly community development and are consistent with a coordinated scheduling of other public works in the area. Such orderly development and coordination would minimize waste and unnecessary costs which are the result of the unplanned and haphazard construction of basic community facilities.

The requirement that a facility assisted with grants have adequate capacity to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area would avoid the duplication of costs often occasioned by having to rebuild undersized facilities at a later date.

The committee wishes to make it clear that the expectation of growth is not a prerequisite for this aid but only that in planning a system the plans should take into account future demands as well as present requirements.

Grants for neighborhood facilities

The bill would authorize the Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to finance specific projects for neighborhood facilities, including neighborhood or community centers, youth centers, health stations, and other public buildings to provide health or recreational or similar social services. The grants generally would be limited to 66½ percent of the cost of the project, but could be up to 75 percent of the cost in the case of a project located in an area designated as a redevelopment area under section 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act.

Before making a grant under this proposal, the Administrator would be required to determine that the project would provide a neighborhood facility which is necessary for carrying out a program of health, recreational, or similar community services. The project must be consistent with comprehensive planning for the development of the community in which the neighborhood facility is to be located.

These Federal grants would help to stimulate a concerted effort by local public bodies, possibly in cooperation with private groups, to provide systematically for often long-neglected needs of the community. Since most of these needs are largely those of low- and moderate-income families and individuals, the neighborhood facility projects would have to be so located as to be available for use by a significant portion (or number in the case of large urban places) of the area's low- or moderate-income residents. In addition, a priority would be given to applications for projects that will primarily benefit members of low-income families or otherwise further the objectives of a community action program approved under title II of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. Your committee expects that the great majority of the neighborhood centers for which grants are made under this bill would be used in connection with such community action programs.

Much of the heavy costs of ill health and juvenile delinquency, and many of the problems of old age, could be avoided by preventive measures such as local preventive health, recreational, and related services. The costs of these services are small when compared to the tremendous economic and social losses resulting from illness and deprivation and the mounting expenditures in curing sickness, making welfare payments, combating crime, and accommodating the needs of the elderly. Availability of Federal grants for neighborhood facilities (many of which can be multipurpose facilities which can serve the needs of different groups) would assist communities to expand, and in some instances initiate, a group of community services which hitherto have been neglected.

Labor standards

Prevailing wage requirements determined in accordance with the provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act would be applicable to construction work financed with grants for basic public works or for neighborhood facilities.

Appropriations

The bill would authorize to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of title VI. All funds so appropriated would remain available until expended. In order to give the committee and the Congress an opportunity to evaluate the experience under this program, the authority to make grants under this title would expire on October 1, 1969.

TITLE VII—FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

Increase in FNMA special assistance authority

This title would provide for increases in the revolving authority under which the President authorizes FNMA to furnish special assistance to mortgage financing of certain housing. Under its special assistance programs, FNMA makes commitments to purchase and purchases mortgages underwritten by the Government that finance housing for low- and moderate-income families, in urban renewal areas, for the elderly, for disaster victims, and other special types of housing designated by the President as being housing that needs special assistance.

The increases aggregate $1,625 million. They would be provided by increasing the authorization by $100 million on the date of enactment of the bill, by $450 million on July 1, 1966, by $550 million on July 1, 1967, and by $525 million on July 1, 1968.

This total is $500 million less than requested by the Administration, a reduction made possible by the elimination of the proposed program of FHA mortgage insurance for "new communities."

Further increases in the amount of Presidential special assistance authority would be provided by transferring and adding to such authority, on the date of enactment of the bill and on each July 1 thereafter, the then available portions of the special assistance authorization provided separately for FHA title VIII insured mortgages on housing for military, NASA, and AEC personnel. Your committee is informed that approximately $220 million of this authority will be available for transfer on the date of enactment of the bill. Such transfers would not be new special assistance fund authorizations as they would come from special assistance authority previously provided by the Congress.

Of the total special assistance authority that this title would make available under the control of the President, your committee understands that the administration plans to utilize approximately $1.5 billion for rental housing for low- and moderate-income families that will be financed with FHA-insured below-market interest rate mortgages, and that the balance of the authority will be needed for urban renewal housing and other special financing needs.

It should be further noted that the "pooling" arrangement provided for in title I of the bill will make it possible to finance an even larger amount of housing while reducing the budget impact by enabling FNMA to draw on private investors for a part of its funds.

In connection with the administration's projected use of the $1.5 billion additional special assistance authority for FHA-insured section 221(d)(3) below-market interest rate mortgages, the Housing Administrator's statement in the hearings on the bill made mention of the direct relationship between the amount of FNMA's commitment and purchasing authority and the scope of FHA's operations under the 221(d)(3) program for low- and moderate-income housing. Because of their below-market interest rate, all of the mortgages will be offered to FNMA for purchase.

Increase in limitation on mortgages for dwelling units having four or more bedrooms

A mortgage eligible for purchase under FNMA's special assistance programs cannot exceed a general statutory $17,500 limitation in original principal amount for each family residence or dwelling unit covered by the mortgage. The law exempts from this limitation all mortgages insured by FHA under the section 220 urban renewal housing program, the title VIII housing program for military, NASA, and AEC personnel, and the section 213 cooperative housing program on properties in urban renewal areas, and also all FHA-insured and VA-guaranteed mortgages on properties in Alaska, Guam, or Hawaii.

A provision of this title would raise the $17,500 limitation to $20,000 in the case of family residences or dwelling units having four or more bedrooms. The mortgages that are now exempt from the $17,500 limitation would also be exempt from the new $20,000 limitation.

Your committee believes that for residences or dwelling units having fewer than four bedrooms the $17,500 limitation serves a practical purpose in helping to keep the cost of such housing financed with special assistance funds within the means of modest income families. The committee recognizes, however, that there is a need for increased production of housing for larger families, and believes that establishment of the higher limitation of $20,000 for such cases will serve to encourage its production.

TITLE VIII—OPEN-SPACE LAND AND URBAN BEAUTIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT

This title would continue the program authorized by title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 in an expanded and more liberal form to provide aid for built-up areas as well as the suburbs and to encourage communities to increase their expenditures for park improvement and other activities that will make them more attractive and better places in which to live.

Authorization of funds.—The bill would eliminate the present $75 million contract authority for grants for open-space land and substitute authority for appropriation of such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title including the two new forms of aid described below. It also provides a termination date of October 1, 1969, for the programs under this title.

Increased grant level for preservation of open-space land.—Under the present open-space land program, grants may be made to public bodies for up to 20 percent of the total cost of acquisition of open-space land in urban areas, or up to 30 percent of the cost if the public body exercises open-space responsibilities for all or a substantial part of the entire urban area. The bill would increase the grant levels from 20 and 30 percent to 30 and 40 percent, respectively.

The proposed grant increases would strengthen the ability of State and local agencies to acquire urban land that is still undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped and has value for park, recreation, conservation, scenic, or historic purposes. In many urban areas, undeveloped land is rapidly disappearing or greatly increasing in cost. Prompt action must be taken to acquire suitable land while it is still available. This will not only help to conserve public funds in the face of sharply increasing land costs, but will also assist in shaping urban development to allow the provision of transportation and other public facilities at minimum cost.

The present program has been in operation over 3 years, and in that time has assisted in the preservation of over 120,000 acres of open-space land in urban areas within 35 States. This is an encouraging beginning. However, increased efforts are needed. Our urban population is growing considerably more rapidly than parks and other urban open spaces are being provided, so that the backlog of unmet needs is actually expanding rather than decreasing. An increase in the Federal grant level is vital if communities are to be given adequate assistance in preserving open-space land.

It is important, also, to raise the grant percentages at this time so that the Federal assistance made available for parks and other open space in urban areas through this program may be more effectively coordinated with that made available through the new outdoor recreation programs authorized by the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965. That act authorizes up to 50 percent grants for acquisition and development of recreation areas which serve a complementary purpose at the State level.

Assistance for acquiring developed land

The bill would also broaden the existing open-space land program to permit grants to be made to help acquire and clear developed land within built-up urban areas for small parks, squares, playgrounds, pedestrian malls, and other open-space purposes. The committee expects that generally when any existing structures are to be acquired, they will be blighted or deteriorating. Grants could not exceed 40 percent of the cost of acquiring the land and of demolishing and removing those improvements which would be inappropriate to its intended open-space use.

The present program is limited to assisting in the acquisition of land that is undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped. Although land may be acquired under the program anywhere within the urban area, this has tended to limit the operation of the program to outlying areas of cities and their suburbs. Thus, while over 90 percent of open-space funds have been allocated for the acquisition of lands in metropolitan areas, less than 15 percent of the lands acquired have been located in built-up portions of these areas. Similarly, of the 331 grants approved since 1961, only 55 were to localities of over 50,000 population.

Sufficient undeveloped land is often not available to meet the open-space needs of built-up areas. Yet the high value of developed land makes it nearly impossible for local governments to acquire and clear such land for open-space uses without substantial assistance. The park and open-space acquisition programs of many major cities have been intermittent and desultory for the past several decades, with few properties being acquired in built-up sections of the city. The proposed new program is essential to help correct this situation.

The committee sees this program as meeting several urgent needs in our cities and other urban areas. It could assist, for example, in the acquisition of land for pedestrian malls, waterfront restoration, and neighborhood play areas, as well as the usual form of parks. More such areas are needed to enhance the physical environment of our urban communities and to make them more attractive places in which to live and work.

In many cases this program would be especially useful in connection with projects of rehabilitation and code enforcement. Often one key to neighborhood decay is a lack of parks and playgrounds. The provision of properly located and well-designed open-space areas would be a useful catalyst in encouraging and supporting rehabilitation efforts.

The committee has put a $500,000 limitation on the Federal grant for individual projects under this program. This is to assure both that projects will be of relatively small size and that improvements to be acquired and demolished will generally be deteriorating, small, or otherwise relatively incidental to the land acquisitions involved.

In all instances, assistance would be limited to those situations where the governing body of the locality determines that adequate open-space needs cannot be met through existing undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped land. Such a finding would be based on the locality's assessment of its own long-term needs. Also, the Housing Administrator would be required to make a finding that the proposed open space is important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality.

As with the present open-space program, land acquired under the program would have to be permanently retained as open space, except under certain strictly specified conditions. These allow necessary conversions, but only under strict requirements for substitution of other open-space land of at least equal market value and equivalent usefulness and location. These requirements assure that no locality will sell or otherwise convert open-space land without urgent cause.

Urban beautification and improvement

Another new program would provide partial grants to assist in carrying out local programs of beautification and improvement of open-space and other public land in urban areas. The need for such assistance was emphasized by the President in his message on the state of the Union, and more recently in both his messages on natural beauty and on the central city and its suburbs.

Programs are already available for dealing with neighborhoods that have deteriorated to the point where rehabilitation or clearance is required. But large areas of our cities, while not yet blighted, are overcrowded and uninviting—lacking in the basic street, park, and other improvements so important to a sense of community spirit. The proposed community beautification and improvement program would, at moderate cost, enable localities to increase their activities which improve the attractiveness of their streets and public places. This could produce real dollars-and-cents benefits in encouraging the kind of neighborhood and community pride which is the best defense against blight and decay.

Local programs would, under criteria established by the Housing Administrator, be required (1) to represent significant and effective efforts, involving all available public and private resources, for the beautification and improvement of open-space and other public land in the community, and (2) to be important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality. The community would be encouraged to make maximum use of other urban beautification means in addition to the activities assisted with the Federal grants. Examples of other measures might be the regulation of signs and utility wires, zoning to prevent auto graveyards in inappropriate areas, and school programs to foster pride in maintaining and improving the appearance of the community.

The responsibility for preparing and carrying out local programs would be primarily that of the local public bodies receiving the grants. However, it is contemplated that the programs would provide for appropriate participation by private groups and individuals—for example, garden clubs, business and civic groups, store-owner associations, and chambers of commerce. Coordination would also be required with related public programs bearing upon urban improvement and beautification.

Assisted activities would have to be capable of providing long-term benefits to the locality. Assistance would not, for example, be provided for the increased operating costs of keeping parks better lighted or more tidy. On the other hand, assistance could be provided for the cost of additional lighting fixtures. Thus, it is anticipated that many of the assisted activities would be "routine" improvements, but improvements which the proposed Federal assistance would enable the localities to undertake on a broader scale. Examples of activities eligible for assistance would include the following:

(1) Park development, including basic water and sanitary facilities, interior paths and walks, landscaping, shelters, recreation equipment, and other similar facilities normally associated with park and open-space areas. Generally no assistance would be provided for the construction of buildings. Only those small structures would be eligible for assistance which are incidental to proposed park or other open-space uses. Toilet facilities or rain shelters might be assisted, but an activities center, museum building, swimming pool, golf course, or other specialized major recreation facility could not be.

(2) Substantial upgrading and improvement of other public areas such as malls, squares, and waterfront areas.

(3) Street improvements such as lighting, benches, tree planting, and imaginative use of pavement and other outdoor "flooring".

(4) Activities in behalf of the arts, such as construction of facilities for outdoor exhibits.

A Federal grant could not exceed 40 percent of the amount by which the cost of the activities carried on by the applicant, during its fiscal year, under a local program has exceeded its usual expenditures for comparable activities. The usual expenditures of the applicant for such activities would be determined in accordance with administrative regulations based on the previous expenditures of the locality but taking into account, to the extent feasible, unusual circumstances affecting those expenditures.

Approval would be given in advance for the types of activities to be carried out and the overall amounts which could be spent, but a portion of each grant would be withheld until the required accounting at the end of the year. This procedure would help to assure that the Federal assistance is in fact provided only for additional local efforts.

Regulations would be established to assure that assistance under this program is not provided where grants were available under other Federal programs—for example, landscaping in connection with construction of federally assisted highways.

Demonstration grants for urban beautification and improvement

An important aim of the beautification provisions is to encourage and assist local experimentation and innovation. To facilitate this, the Housing Administrator would be authorized to make up to $5 million of grants, without the otherwise-required matching local grants, for projects which he determines to have special value in developing and demonstrating new and improved methods and materials for use in beautification and improvement activities. However, it is expected that grants under this provision would ordinarily be for less than 100 percent of cost, since allowance would be made for the continued benefit which the project might provide the locality.

The experience gained in these special demonstration projects could, in turn, be made available to other localities through the authority of the Administrator to undertake studies and publish information to carry out the purposes of the open-space land and urban beautification provisions.

Demonstration projects would be selected on the basis of their value for demonstrating a technique or facility having broad applicability to other communities. Assistance ordinarily would not be made available for regular continuing activities under an urban improvement and beautification program.

It is believed that this demonstration program can play a major role in developing new and imaginative approaches for meeting the goals of the urban beautification program. It can also help avoid costly mistakes by other communities, as well as suggesting those activities and programs most likely to achieve desired results and describing how they can be carried out most efficiently and economically.

Use of funds for studies and publication

The bill would permit the use of open-space grant appropriations, not to exceed $100,000 per year, for undertaking and publishing open-space surveys and other studies in connection with activities under the open-space land and urban beautification programs. This will help to provide much-needed information and data on such problems as the kind of open-space uses and forms which help create more vital and livable cities, new means for preserving open-space, less-than-fee acquisition experience, and an analysis of the operation of State open-space programs.

General provisions

Relocation payments to persons, families, businesses, and nonprofit organizations displaced by projects assisted under this title would be fully reimbursed by the Federal Government, the same as in the urban renewal and other Housing Agency programs.

Prevailing wages, as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act, would be required to be paid to all laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on construction work assisted under this title.

TITLE IX—RURAL HOUSING

Insured rural housing loans

The hearings clearly demonstrated the need for greatly expanding the rural housing program. Almost half of the substandard housing of this Nation is in rural areas although only 30 percent of our population lives there.

A widespread housing credit gap continues to exist in rural areas despite the efforts of the Federal Housing Administration to reach farther and more effectively into rural areas with its existing insured loan programs.

The new rural housing insured loan program of the Farmers Home Administration authorized by title IX will increase the opportunities available to those rural families who cannot qualify for housing loans from other sources. Under this new program, loans up to $300 million a year could be insured for families in low- and moderate-income levels who would pay interest at a rate not exceeding 5 percent per annum. Additional loans could be insured for families with incomes above the moderate level. These families would pay rates on their loans comparable to the rates paid on insured Federal Housing Administration loans. The new authority will serve to reduce in some degree the inequality between urban and rural families in the field of housing, without increasing the strain on the Federal budget.

The amount of funds made available under existing law for regular section 502 rural housing loans during the 1965 fiscal year was $122 million. On March 31, 1965, the Farmers Home Administration had on hand more than 15,000 applications. For several years, the agency has not had sufficient loan funds to reduce its backlog of loan applications from eligible applicants aggregating more than $100 million.

The applications on hand, moreover, are only a small indication of the need for raising to an adequate level the housing of millions of rural families. Almost 3 million rural families live in houses that need major repairs. More than a million live in homes that are in such a dilapidated condition that they endanger the health and safety of the occupants as well as the community in which they live. One out of three rural homes has no bath facilities.

Another important fact that came to the attention of the committee is that housing needs among the low-income rural families are particularly acute. Half of the rural families who, in 1959, had incomes of less than $3,000 were living in houses that were so run down that they needed replacement or major repairs to make them habitable. These are the families who do not have enough income to repair their homes and cannot even qualify for a modest home improvement loan from most creditors.

The committee believes that the rural housing loan program of the Farmers Home Administration has been administered in an outstanding manner. This program has, in a modest way, demonstrated that it can effectively improve the quality of housing on farms and in rural nonfarm areas.

Your committee also noted the experience the Farmers Home Administration has had in the successful operation of the agricultural credit insurance fund under the Consolidated Farmers Home Administration Act of 1961. The committee therefore recommends an insured program for rural housing loans similar to the one that has proved to be successful under the 1961 act.

There are several important differences between the two programs. One is that the proposed bill would establish a 5-year minimum repurchase period, whereas the 1961 act permits a 3-year minimum period. Another difference is that any amount withheld as a loan insurance charge is discretionary with the Secretary under the proposed bill. The Consolidated Farmers Home Administration Act requires a minimum charge of one-half of 1 percent. The greater latitude in the bill is designed to provide more flexibility in establishing the interest rate to investors in insured loans and thus improve their salability.

Authority to buy previously occupied homes and building sites

Throughout rural America are many vacant houses that are structurally sound and can be purchased and modernized at a cost considerably below the cost of building a new house. Under present law, rural housing loans to buy previously occupied dwellings and the sites may be made only to elderly persons.

The committee believes that extending this authority to all age groups in rural areas will be a way of effectively utilizing existing structures and will be particularly useful in helping low-income families acquire a decent home of their own within their capacity to pay.

Authority to buy sites upon which to build also will be useful in helping more low-income families acquire homes of their own.

Limitations on interest rate

The bill sets a 5-percent maximum interest rate for insured loans to families in low- and moderate-income levels. For families with incomes above the moderate level, rates will be comparable to the interest rates and insurance charges paid by families who receive Federal Housing Administration insured loans. The committee also recognizes, however, that many families have such low incomes that they cannot pay the higher rates that are necessary to make insured loans salable. For this reason the bill provides that on direct loans to senior citizens for single-family housing and on the specialized direct loans under sections 503 and 504 the maximum interest rate will remain at 4 percent.

The bill also retains in the Secretary discretionary authority to set rates at less than the statutory maximum for direct loans to families in distress situations, such as those whose buildings were destroyed or damaged by natural disasters and families with low incomes who cannot afford to pay 5 percent interest. An example of the latter group would be farm laborers or other low-income families who participate in a self-help approach to obtain decent homes of their own. Such a family could have a low-cost home by obtaining a modest loan within their ability to repay and constructing the home with their own or exchange labor in order to keep the cash cost at a minimum.

With respect to direct loans for senior citizens rental housing, the maximum rate would be 3 percent. This results from a change which section 105 of the bill would make in section 202(a)(3) of the Housing Act of 1959. The ceiling on interest provided for in that section is made applicable to direct loans for rental housing for rural senior citizens by section 515(a)(2) of the Housing Act of 1949.

Extension of rural housing loan program

The committee recommends an extension to October 1, 1969, of existing authorizations that expire September 30, 1965, to permit an orderly administration of the rural housing program.

The bill also will increase from $10 million to $50 million the total amount of appropriations authorized for section 516 grants to help nonprofit sponsors provide low-rent housing for domestic farm labor. This increase is needed to provide an effective approach to improving the housing of our farm labor. The harsh economic facts are that, because of the short period of occupancy of housing by farm laborers, growers cannot afford to invest the total cost of adequate housing and, because of the low wages received by most farmworkers, they are unable to pay the rent that would be needed to provide the income necessary to repay a loan for the full cost of the housing. These section 516 grants, which may be made up to two-thirds of the cost of the housing, should greatly accelerate the rate of replacing the existing labor slum housing with housing that is adequate but modest and economical.

The committee feels that the Farmers Home Administration has carried on an eminently successful rural housing program on farms, in the open country, and in small rural towns and villages of not over 2,500 population. We recognize however that some communities with populations in excess of 2,500 which are basically rural in character do not have access to adequate housing credit at reasonable terms. The committee suggests that the Farmers Home Administration continue to be alert to this problem and recommends that the agency thoughtfully explore the feasibility of modifying its regulations to extend its rural housing loans to residents of towns that may have populations in excess of 2,500 but nevertheless are rural in character.

The committee urges the Farmers Home Administration to continue its vigilance to assure that the authorizations in this title are not employed to make credit available to any applicants who may be able to qualify for loans from and meet the requirements of responsible local lenders.

TITLE X—MISCELLANEOUS

Urban planning grants—authorization

The bill would eliminate the existing $105 million ceiling on the authorization for appropriation of funds for urban planning grants under section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954. Additional funds would, of course, be made available only through appropriations. The bill would further provide a cutoff date of October 1, 1969, for the urban planning grant program. Thus far, $86 million of the existing authorization of $105 million has been appropriated. The estimated program level for fiscal year 1966 is $35 million.

Under section 701, the Housing Administrator is authorized to make grants (generally not to exceed two-thirds of the estimated costs) to States and local planning agencies to assist in preparing comprehensive development plans and programs. The program is designed to encourage and facilitate comprehensive planning for urban development on a continuing basis, including planning for open-space land and urban transportation. Surveys and analyses of population, economy, physiography, land use, transportation, and similar factors may be financed, as well as preparation of comprehensive development plans for the areas involved and maintenance of data on a current basis. Since its inception, more than 4,500 different localities have participated in the program.

Federal-State training program—authorization

The bill would eliminate the existing $10 million ceiling on the authorization for appropriation of funds for grants for the Federal-State training program and provide a cutoff date of October 1, 1969, for the programs. Additional funds would, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

Under part 1 of title VIII of the Housing Act of 1964, the Housing Administrator is authorized to make matching grants to States to assist them in developing special training programs for technical and professional people who are, or are likely to be, employed by a governmental or public body which has responsibilities for community development. These matching grants may also be used to support State and local research on housing, public improvement programs, code problems, efficient land use, urban transportation, and similar community development problems.

This program is needed to help local programs become more effective and economical, and to strengthen generally the capabilities of local government. Your committee wishes to express its concern that although the Housing Act of 1964 authorized $10 million for grants under this program, funds have not yet been appropriated.

Public works planning advances—authorization

The existing $20 million ceiling on the authorization for appropriation of funds for public works planning advances under section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954 would be eliminated by the bill. A cutoff date of October 1, 1969, would be provided for the program. Additional funds would, of course, be made available only through appropriations.

Under section 702, the Housing Administrator is authorized to advance interest-free funds to States, municipalities, and other public agencies to help finance the cost of planning various public works and facilities. These advances become repayable in whole or in part when construction is started.

As of the end of 1964, a total of 3,817 applications for approximately $92 million have been approved under the program. The estimated cost of the projects aided through these public works planning advances totals $5.56 billion. As of the same date, 3,360 plans involving Federal advances of $84 billion have been completed and 1,186 advances for $31 million have been repaid.

Savings and loan associations

The bill would authorize savings and loan associations to make loans on the security of buildings to be used as college dormitories, or fraternity or sorority houses, or for residential purposes by the staffs of community hospitals. It would further authorize such associations to make loans on the security of leaseholds which extend or are renewable for at least 10 years beyond the maturity of the loan. Under existing law, savings and loan associations may make such loans on the security of leasehold interests only if such leaseholds extend or are renewable for at least 15 years beyond the loan's maturity. In addition, the bill would confer upon District of Columbia associations the same investment powers as Federal savings and loan associations, and subject them to the same regulations as apply to Federally chartered associations.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF THE BILL AS REPORTED

The first section provides that the bill may be cited by its short title—the “Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965”.

TITLE I—HOUSING FOR DISADVANTAGED PERSONS

Section 101. Financial assistance to enable certain private housing to be available for lower income families who are elderly, handicapped, displaced, or occupants of substandard housing

This section authorizes the Housing Administrator to undertake and carry out a program of annual rent supplement payments to help make housing available to individuals and families who are unable to obtain standard private housing at a rental equal to or less than one-fourth of their income. Eligibility for the program would be limited, however, to tenants who are elderly, those who are handicapped, those who are displaced by governmental action, and those who were living in substandard housing. Payment of rent supplements under the program would be made by the Administrator under contracts entered into with private nonprofit corporations, limited dividend corporations, and cooperatives which are mortgagors hereafter approved for purpose of FHA-insured section 221(d)(3) market-interest-rate mortgages and for purposes of the rent supplement program. The maximum term of any such contract would be 40 years, and the payments thereunder would be limited to the amount by which the fair market rental of the dwelling unit involved exceeds one-fourth of the tenant's income. The aggregate amount of such payments would be limited by appropriation acts, but could not exceed $50 million a year initially; this limitation would be increased by $50 million on July 1 of each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968.

The Administrator would issue regulations and establish criteria and procedures for carrying out the program. He would certify to the housing owners the basic facts needed to establish eligibility of tenants, and would recertify tenant incomes at least every 2 years thereafter (except in the case of elderly tenants) so as to permit the adjustment of rental charges and annual payments under the program on the basis of tenants' income. The Administrator could enter into agreements, or authorize housing owners under the program to enter into agreements, with public or private agencies to provide for the services required in selection of qualified tenants. Such agreements could confer upon such private or public agencies the authority to issue certificates of eligibility.

The workable program for community improvement otherwise required for section 221(d)(3) mortgage insurance would not be required with respect to housing to be used under the rent supplement program, except in cases where such a program was already required and in effect in the community for purposes of Federal assistance in the form of code enforcement, urban renewal, or public housing.

An individual or family occupying a dwelling unit assisted under the rent supplement program would not be eligible for the additional relocation adjustment payments authorized for displacees under the Federal urban renewal program.

The Administrator would be directed to report to the Congress on or before January 1, 1968, with respect to operations under the rent supplement program.

Section 102. Extension of FHA section 221 programs; modification of interest rate; pooling of mortgages for sale

Subsection (a) amends section 221(f) of the National Housing Act to extend for 4 years (to October 1, 1969) FHA's authority to insure mortgages under its section 221 programs of housing for lower income families. These include the sales housing program under subsection (d)(2), the market rate and below market rate rental housing programs for nonprofit mortgagors under subsection (d)(3), and the rental housing program for profitmaking mortgagors under subsection (d)(4).

Subsection (b) amends section 221(d)(5) of the act to place an interest rate ceiling of 3 percent (or the rate derived under the existing formula, if lower) on mortgages which may be insured by FHA under the section 221(d)(3) below market interest rate program. (The rate is now 3½ percent and is expected to rise to 4 percent or higher on June 30, 1965.)

Subsection (c) amends section 302(c) of the act, which authorizes FNMA to set up pooling arrangements for mortgages and sell participations therein, to authorize appropriations to reimburse FNMA, where section 221(d)(3) below mortgage interest rate mortgages are included in any trust or other agency under such an arrangement, for the differential between its total outlay with respect to such trust or agency and its total receipts from such mortgages.

Section 103. Low-rent housing in private accommodations

This section adds to the United States Housing Act of 1937 a new section 23 to provide a new form of low-rent housing, utilizing existing privately owned housing to supplement the units provided in low-rent housing projects under the existing program.

Each local public housing agency would conduct a continuing survey and listing of the available privately owned dwelling units within the area under its jurisdiction which provide decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations and are (or can be made) suitable for use as "low-rent housing in private accommodations" under the new program. The owners of housing so listed would be notified from time to time of the anticipated need for dwelling units to be used under the new program, and invited to make their units available for such purpose. (Not more than 10 percent of the units in any single structure could be used in the program, except in the case of buildings with small numbers of units or in other cases determined by the local agency.)

If the local agency finds that units offered in response to such an invitation are (or can be made) suitable for use in the new program and that the rentals to be charged are within the financial range of low-income families, it may approve such units for use as low-rent housing in private accommodations and enter into a contract (having a term of from 1 to 3 years, renewable) with the owner for their use in the program. Each such contract would make the selection of tenants for the units involved a function of the owner of the property subject to the contract between the local agency and PHA, would provide for the negotiation of the rentals by the local agency and the owner (using standards applicable to units in low-rent housing projects), and would contain other appropriate terms and conditions.

Payments under the new program to housing owners would be made from funds generally authorized for annual contributions to low-rent housing. In any case such payments (to the extent they are in lieu of other guaranteed contributions under the 1937 act) would be limited to the amount of the fixed annual contributions payable for a newly constructed project offering comparable accommodations; and the period over which such payments may be made as well as the aggregate amount of such payments would be determined on the basis of the extent to which the new program is operating in the community involved.

The tax exemption and workable program requirements otherwise applicable to low-rent public housing would be waived in the case of low-rent housing in private accommodations.

PHA would be directed to report to the Congress on or before January 1, 1968, with respect to operations under the new program.

Section 104. Low-rent public housing

Subsection (a) amends section 10(e) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 to increase by $47 million immediately, and by an additional $47 million in each of the years 1966 through 1968, the existing limit on the aggregate amount of contracts for annual contributions which may be entered into by PHA under the low-rent housing program. This increase would provide an estimated 60,000 additional units of low-rent housing annually over the 4-year period, to be available both for conventional low-rent housing projects and for the new approaches to low-rent housing contained in the bill (purchase, purchase and rehabilitation, lease, and low-rent housing in private accommodations).

Subsection (b) amends section 10(c) of the 1937 act to provide an alternative formula for computing annual contributions in the case of low-rent housing provided through the purchase, purchase and rehabilitation, or lease of privately owned existing dwelling units. Under the alternative formula a maximum dollar amount (based on the fixed annual contribution otherwise established for a newly constructed housing project offering comparable facilities) could be established as the annual contribution for a purchased or leased unit, thus permitting the acquisition, or acquisition and rehabilitation, of structures over whatever period may be appropriate, as well as the leasing of units for short-term use in meeting particular needs.

Subsection (c) amends section 2(2) of the 1937 act to establish parity of treatment between handicapped families and elderly families for low-rent housing purposes, thereby extending to handicapped families all of the various special provisions in the act (for example, increased room cost limits in the case of low-rent housing designed specifically for the families involved, and the special contribution of $120 per unit per year for dwelling units occupied by them) presently available to the elderly.

Subsection (d) amends section 15(7) of the 1937 act to eliminate altogether the existing requirement that there be a 20-percent gap between the upper rental limits for admission to a low-rent housing project and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing a substantial supply of standard housing. Previous laws have already eliminated the 20-percent-gap requirement for the displaced and the elderly.

Section 105. Direct loans to provide housing for the elderly or handicapped

This section amends section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 (the program of direct loans to provide housing for the elderly or handicapped) to eliminate the existing $350 million ceiling on the total amount authorized to be appropriated for such loans, at the same time adding a provision which terminates the program as of October 1, 1969.

In addition, a ceiling of 3 percent (or the amount derived under the existing formula, if lower) would be placed on the interest rate applicable to loans under the program. (Under existing law, the interest rate is the higher of 2¾ percent or the rate derived under the formula. The latter is currently 3¾ percent and is expected to rise to 4 percent on June 30, 1965.)

Section 106. Rehabilitation grants to homeowners in urban renewal areas

This section adds to title I of the Housing Act of 1949 (the urban renewal program) a new section 115 to authorize the use of urban renewal capital grant funds (without any requirement of local matching) for grants to low-income homeowners in an urban renewal area to cover the cost of residential repairs and improvements which are necessary in order to comply with applicable housing codes or other requirements of the urban renewal program.

A rehabilitation grant under the new section 115 may cover the actual cost of the repairs and improvements involved up to a maximum of $1,500; except that if the homeowner's income exceeds $2,000 a year, the grant would in any case be limited to the portion of such cost which cannot be paid for with any available loan that can be amortized without requiring the homeowner's housing expense to exceed 25 percent of his monthly income.

Outstanding contracts under the urban renewal program may be amended to include rehabilitation grants under the new section 115.

TITLE II—FHA INSURANCE OPERATIONS

Section 201. Land development

Subsection (a) adds to the National Housing Act a new title X to authorize a new program of FHA mortgage insurance for land improvement and site development.

Under the new program, FHA would be authorized to insure mortgages to finance the acquisition of land and the installation of improvements such as water and sewer lines, streets, curbs, sidewalks, and storm drainage facilities. Buildings could be included only if they are needed in connection with water supply or sewage disposal installations, or are to be owned and maintained jointly by the property owners (but in no case could school buildings be included).

The Commissioner would be directed to adopt appropriate requirements to encourage the maintenance of a diversified local home-building industry, broad participation by builders, and a proper balance of housing for low- and moderate-income families.

The maximum mortgage for a single land insurance undertaking could not exceed $12,500,000. The mortgage maximum would be limited to 50 percent of the Commissioner's estimate of the value of the land before development plus 90 percent of his estimate of the cost of such development, subject to an overall ceiling of 75 percent of the value upon completion.

The maximum maturity of the mortgage would be limited to 7 years and the Commissioner would be authorized to prescribe maximum interest rates and premium charges.

To be eligible, the mortgage would have to represent a good mortgage insurance risk in the Commissioner's estimation, and the development would have to be consistent with sound land use patterns and consistent with comprehensive planning being carried on for the area in which the land is situated. It would also have to be served by such shopping, school, recreational, transportation, and other facilities as the Commissioner deems adequate or necessary.

Cost certification would be required to assure that the amount of the mortgage loan outstanding at reasonable intervals during construction does not exceed the maximum loan ratios described above.

No mortgage could be insured under the new program after October 1, 1969, except pursuant to a commitment to insure issued before that date.

Subsection (b) of this section of the bill amends various provisions of law to make land development mortgages insured under the new title X eligible for FNMA's regular secondary market program and for investments by national banks and Federal savings and loan associations.

Section 202. Extension of insurance authorizations

This section amends the relevant sections of the National Housing Act to continue for 4 years (until October 1, 1969) FHA's existing authority to insure (1) property improvement loans under the title I program, (2) housing loans and mortgages under all of the FHA programs except those with independent termination dates, and (3) mortgages under the section 809 and section 810 programs for the military, NASA, and AEC. (The sec. 221 program of mortgage insurance for low- and moderate-income families would be continued for 4 years by sec. 102 of the bill, discussed above.)

Section 203. Multifamily mortgage limits for four or more bedroom units

This section amends FHA's multifamily housing programs (secs. 207, 213, 220, 221, 231, and 234 of the National Housing Act) to increase the dollar limitation on the amount of an insurable mortgage in the case of dwelling units having four or more bedrooms. The amount of the increase would range from $2,250 to $2,500 per family unit. No change would be made in the existing limits for dwelling units having less than four bedrooms.

Section 204. Rehabilitation in urban renewal areas

This section amends section 220 of the National Housing Act (FHA's urban renewal housing program) to increase the maximum amount of an insurable mortgage in a case where the mortgagor is not the occupant of the property but intends to hold it for rental purposes from 85 percent of the amount which an owner-occupant could receive to 93 percent of such amount. The existing 85-percent limit would continue to apply where the nonoccupant mortgagor intends to hold the property for sale rather than rental. Where refinancing is involved, existing indebtedness for improvement of the property could be included in the computation of the mortgage amount whether or not the indebtedness is secured by a mortgage against the property.

Section 205. Nondwelling facilities for urban renewal housing

This section amends section 220 of the National Housing Act (FHA's urban renewal housing program) to expand the class of nondwelling facilities which may be included in a project financed with a section 220 mortgage. Under the amendment, such a project could include such nondwelling facilities which will contribute to the project's economic feasibility as the Commissioner deems desirable and consistent with the urban renewal plan, so long as the project is predominantly residential. [(Under existing law only such nondwelling facilities as are needed to serve the occupants of the project and of other housing in the neighborhood would be included.)]

Section 206. Larger insured mortgages for servicemen

This section amends section 222 of the National Housing Act (the FHA mortgage insurance program for servicemen) to increase from $20,000 to $30,000 the maximum amount of a mortgage insurable thereunder, and to make the downpayments in all cases the same as those under the regular section 203(b) home mortgage insurance program (3 percent of the value of the property up to $15,000, 10 percent of the value over $15,000 but not over $20,000, and 25 percent of the value over $20,000).

Section 207. Refinancing of insured mortgages

This section amends section 223 of the National Housing Act to give FHA the authority to insure mortgages executed for the purpose of refinancing existing mortgages insured under any of FHA's programs; this authority is now available only for mortgages insured under sections 220, 221, 903, 908, and (in certain cases) 608.

Section 208. Consolidation of FHA insurance funds

This section adds to title V of the National Housing Act a new section 519, providing for the consolidation into a single general insurance fund of all of FHA's existing insurance funds except the mutual mortgage insurance fund, which would continue without change in its present coverage of section 203 mortgages (although sec. 203(k) home improvement loans would be transferred to the new fund). The only other FHA-insured mortgages not covered by the new general insurance fund would be the section 213 cooperative housing mortgages which would be the obligation of the new cooperative management housing insurance fund established by section 209 of the bill (discussed below).

Section 209. Mutuality for management-type cooperatives

This section amends section 213 of the National Housing Act to place FHA's mortgage insurance program for management-type cooperatives on a mutual basis. (Sales-type cooperatives would not be included, nor would projects built for sale to cooperatives unless actually so sold.) A new cooperative management housing insurance fund would be created with funds transferred from the general insurance fund (established by sec. 208 of the bill), with a general surplus account and a participating reserve account to which income or loss would be appropriately credited or charged. Cooperative mortgages heretofore insured and transferred to the new fund, as well as cooperative mortgages insured in the future, would be eligible for mutuality.

Section 210. Optional cash payment of insurance benefits

This section adds to title V of the National Housing Act a new section 520, authorizing the FHA Commissioner in his discretion to pay either in cash or in debentures any insurance claim filed by a mortgagee under any of FHA's programs after the enactment of the bill. (Under existing law payment must be in debentures, except in the case of mortgages insured under secs. 220, 221, and 233 after the enactment of the 1961 Housing Act and loans insured under sec. 203(k) after the enactment of the 1964 act.) The Commissioner could obtain the funds for these cash payments by borrowing from the Treasury.

Any such cash payment would be in an amount equivalent to the face amount of the debentures which would otherwise be issued plus the interest such debentures would have earned.

Section 211. FHA mortgage financing for veterans

This section amends section 203(b)(2) of the National Housing Act (FHA's regular residential mortgage insurance program) to provide special liberal terms for veterans who have not received benefits under VA housing programs. For these veterans, in the case of a mortgage covering a single-family home, no downpayment would be required on the first $20,000 of value and 15 percent would be required as a downpayment on the value above $20,000 up to the FHA ceiling for such a mortgage. (The regular terms under such program require a downpayment equal to 3 percent of the first $15,000 of value, 10 percent of the value over $15,000 but not over $20,000, and 25 percent of the value over $20,000.)

Section 212. Mortgage limit for homes in outlying areas under FHA section 203(i) program

This section amends section 203(i) of the National Housing Act to increase from $11,000 to $12,500 the dollar limit on the amount of a mortgage which can be insured under the FHA program of mortgage insurance for low-cost housing in outlying areas.

TITLE III—URBAN RENEWAL

Section 301. Study of housing and building codes, zoning, tax policies, and development standards

This section directs the Housing Administrator to conduct a study of housing and building laws, codes, standards, and regulations, zoning and land use laws, codes, and regulations, and Federal, State, and local tax policies, for the purpose of determining how local property owners and private enterprise can be encouraged to serve as large a part of the total housing and building need as they can and how governmental assistance can be so directed as to enable them to serve a larger part of such need. The Administrator would submit a report based on such study to the President and the Congress within 18 months.

Section 302. General neighborhood renewal plans

This section amends section 102(d) of the Housing Act of 1949 to permit a general neighborhood renewal plan to cover adjoining areas as well as the urban renewal area itself, thereby eliminating the present requirement that the whole area covered by a general neighborhood renewal plan be an urban renewal area, and authorizes such a plan even though the area involved includes subareas which are not themselves so blighted or deteriorated as to require urban renewal treatment.

Section 303. Increase in authorization for capital grants

This section amends section 103(b) of the Housing Act of 1949 to increase the aggregate amount of capital grants which the HHFA Administrator may make under the urban renewal program. At present this amount is $4,725 million, including $25 million for mass transportation demonstration grants which is eliminated by the bill; the resulting $4,700 million would be increased by $675 million on the enactment of the bill, by $725 million on July 1, 1966, and by $750 million on July 1 in each of the years 1967 and 1968.

Section 304. Use of grant or loan funds in code enforcement and rehabilitation projects

This section amends section 110(c) of the Housing Act of 1949 to earmark at least 10 percent of the aggregate amount of the additional capital grant authority provided by section 303 of the bill and subsequent acts, and rehabilitation loans under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964, for projects (assisted with such grants or loans) which involve primarily code enforcement and rehabilitation.

Section 305. Strengthened workable program requirement

This section amends section 101 of the Housing Act of 1949 to require that each workable program required thereby be sufficiently extensive and detailed to prove the need for individual urban renewal projects in the area involved, and that each such project be in accord with such program.

Section 306. Rehabilitation loans

This section amends section 312(d) of the Housing Act of 1964 to eliminate the existing $50 million ceiling on the total amount authorized to be appropriated to the Housing Administrator for rehabilitation loans thereunder, at the same time adding a provision which terminates the rehabilitation loan program as of October 1, 1969.

Section 307. Lease guarantees for small-business concerns displaced by urban renewal projects

This section amends section 7 of the Small Business Act to authorize the Small Business Administration to assist small-business concerns which have been displaced by urban renewal projects in obtaining leases of property, by insuring the owner or lessor of such property against any losses which might be sustained as a result of the small-business concern's failure to perform the lease according to its terms. The lease could not be for a term of more than 10 years, and the small-business concern would have to satisfy SBA that it is financially sound and efficiently managed and will perform the lease according to its terms.

An insurance fund would be established for carrying out the new lease-guarantee program, with $5 million authorized from SBA's revolving fund to provide initial capital. Premiums for the insurance would be fixed by SBA, with a maximum premium equivalent to 1 percent of the annual (or minimum) rental payable under the lease.

Section 308. Relocation of displacees from urban renewal areas

This section amends section 105(c) of the Housing Act of 1949 in order to expand and implement the existing requirement that there be a feasible method for the temporary relocation of persons displaced from an urban renewal area, and the requirement that there be a relocation assistance program designed to determine the needs of displacees, provide information and aid in minimizing the hardships of displacement, and coordinate relocation activities with other governmental activities in the community.

Section 309. Redevelopment in accordance with urban renewal plan

This section amends section 106 of the Housing Act of 1949 to require, as a condition of entering into any urban renewal contract with a local public agency, that such agency demonstrate that its projects theretofore assisted under the urban renewal program have been or will be undertaken and carried out in accordance with the applicable urban renewal plan and the contracts covering such projects.

Section 310. Limitation on noncash grant-in-aid credit allowed for publicly owned parking facilities

This section amends section 110(d) of the Housing Act of 1949 to provide that publicly owned parking facilities provided by a locality in connection with the redevelopment of an urban renewal area can be counted as local grants-in-aid under the urban renewal program only to the extent that the cost of such facilities is not anticipated to be recovered out of the revenues therefrom.

Section 311. Eligibility of communities in depressed areas for urban renewal assistance

This section amends section 103(a)(2) of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize capital grants under the urban renewal program on a full three-fourths basis, in the case of an urban renewal project in a municipality situated in a labor market area which is designated as an urban redevelopment area under the Area Redevelopment Act (or similar legislation subsequently enacted), without regard to such municipality's population; under existing law, grants for projects in such a municipality would be at the regular two-thirds rate unless its population were 150,000 or less. (The 50,000 population limit in existing law on eligibility for the three-fourths rate in the case of municipalities outside urban redevelopment areas would not be changed.) Except in the case of Providence, R.I., this amendment would apply only to future urban renewal grant contracts.

Section 312. Local grants-in-aid for urban renewal project in Philadelphia

This section makes certain expenditures by the University of Pennsylvania for land acquisition and demolition eligible as local grants-in-aid for purposes of urban renewal project Pennsylvania 5-3 (University City).

TITLE IV—COMPENSATION OF CONDEMNNEES

Section 401. Declaration of policy

This section establishes a uniform Federal land acquisition policy for real property acquired in federally assisted housing and urban development programs.

Section 402. Definitions

This section defines various terms used in the new title IV. "Development programs" would include most of the housing, clearance, and rehabilitation programs in which the United States provides financial assistance to local agencies in their acquisition of real property. "Federal assistance" would include grants, loans, guarantees, and annual contributions. An "applicant" would be a public or nonprofit agency or institution which receives Federal assistance under a development program. An "interest" would be any interest in real property, including future, nonpossessory, and leasehold interests. "Real property" would mean land and interests in land, buildings, and fixtures, and articles specially adapted to the use of the property which are not economically capable of use elsewhere.

Section 403. Land acquisition policy

This section conditions Federal assistance under any development program on the applicant's satisfying the Housing Administrator that it will meet certain requirements in connection with the acquisition of land by eminent domain in the course of such program. The applicant would try to acquire real property by negotiation, and before negotiating (1) would have the property appraised, permitting the owner to accompany the appraiser; and (2) would offer the owner a price established by the applicant as fair. In partial takings the applicant would provide the owner with an estimate of the fair market value of the whole property before and the remaining property after the acquisition, of the value of the property acquired, and of damages and benefits to the remaining property. Before an owner surrenders possession of his property, the applicant would have to give him 90 days' notice and (1) pay him the negotiated purchase price, or (2) in any case where only the amount of the payment to the owner is in dispute, pay him not less than 75 percent of the most recently established fair and reasonable price. Rents charged persons temporarily occupying property acquired by the applicant could not exceed the fair rental value of the premises for the period to be occupied, as determined by the applicant. Applicants could not try to lower the price of acquired property by advancing or deferring condemnation or withholding compensation, and could not leave owners with uneconomic remnants of land. The applicant would be required to take into account human considerations in setting project boundaries.

Section 404. Relocation payments under federally assisted programs

Subsection (a) extends the relocation payment provisions of section 114 of the Housing Act of 1949 to families, individuals, business firms, and nonprofit organizations displaced by college housing under title IV of the Housing Act of 1950, housing for the elderly under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, public facilities financed under title II of the Housing Amendments of 1955, and the open space program under title VII of the Housing Act of 1961. These payments are now made to persons displaced by urban renewal and public housing.

Subsection (b) amends section 114(b) of the 1949 act to raise the amount of the additional relocation payment to displaced small business firms from $1,500 to $2,500.

Subsection (c) amends section 114 of the 1949 act to authorize reimbursement of the local agency for the payment by it of certain costs incurred by displaced persons in the transfer of real property to the public body or other recipient of Federal aid. Such costs would include (1) recording fees, transfer taxes, and similar expenses, (2) mortgage prepayment penalties, and (3) the pro rata portion of taxes covering a period after transfer of title.

Subsection (d) provides that these provisions become effective upon the date of enactment of the bill.

Section 405. Funds for certain payments in eminent domain

This section provides that financial assistance under any of the federally assisted development programs enumerated in this title of the bill may include the amounts necessary to finance (under the same formula as in the case of other project costs under the program involved) the 75-percent payments to property owners required by section 403 of the bill (discussed above).

TITLE V—COLLEGE HOUSING

Section 501. Increase in authorization for college housing loans

This section amends section 401 of the Housing Act of 1950 (the college housing loan program) to increase the total amount authorized for college housing loans (presently $2,875 million) by $300 million on July 1 in each of the years 1965 through 1968, for a total increase of $1,200 million.

Section 502. Interest rate on college housing loans

This section amends section 401 of the 1950 act to place a ceiling of 3 percent (or the amount derived under the existing formula, if lower) on the interest rate applicable to college housing loans. (Under existing law, the interest rate is the higher of 2¾ percent or the rate derived under the formula. The latter is currently 3¾ percent and is expected to rise to 4 percent on June 30, 1965.

Section 503. Parking facilities for colleges and universities

This section amends section 404(h) of the 1950 act to make parking facilities for faculty and students eligible for college housing loans.

TITLE VI—COMMUNITY FACILITIES

Section 601. Purpose

This section states that the purpose of title VI of the bill is to assist and encourage the Nation's communities in (1) the construction of adequate basic water and sewer facilities needed to promote efficient and orderly growth and development, and (2) the construction of neighborhood facilities for programs of necessary social services.

Section 602. Grants for basic water and sewer facilities

This section authorizes the Housing Administrator to make grants (up to 50 percent of development cost) to local public bodies and agencies for the construction of basic public water and sewer facilities.

No such grant may be made unless the project involved is necessary to orderly community development and is designed so that an adequate capacity will be available to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area. Further, no such grant may be made unless the project is consistent with a program for a unified or officially coordinated areawide water or sewer facilities system as part of the comprehensively planned development of the area; except that prior to July 1968 such a grant could be made if a program for an areawide system is under active preparation but not yet completed, provided the project for which assistance is sought is urgently needed and can reasonably be expected to be required as part of such program.

Section 603. Grants for neighborhood facilities

This section authorizes the Administrator to make grants (up to 66⅔ percent of development cost, or 75 percent in the case of projects located in depressed areas designated under sec. 5 of the Area Redevelopment Act or similar legislation subsequently enacted) to local public bodies and agencies for the construction of neighborhood facilities which are (1) necessary for carrying out a program of health, recreational, social, or similar community services (including a community action program under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964); (2) consistent with comprehensive planning for the development of the community; and (3) so located as to be available for use by a significant portion or number of the area's low- or moderate-income residents.

A neighborhood facility constructed with such a grant could not be converted to other uses for a period of 20 years, without the Administrator's approval. Priority would be given to projects designed primarily to benefit members of low-income families or otherwise substantially further the objectives of a community action program under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

Section 604. General provisions

This section confers upon the Administrator the usual functions, powers, and duties, and authorizes him to make advance or progress payments on account of any grant made under the program.

Section 605. Definitions

This section defines various terms used in the new title VI. (The term "development cost" would mean the costs of the construction of the facility and the land on which it is located, including necessary site improvements to permit its use as a site for such facility.)

Section 606. Labor standards

This section makes applicable to construction work financed with assistance under sections 602 and 603 the prevailing wage standards of the Davis-Bacon Act (and the usual time-and-a-half overtime provisions), along with the authority generally available to the Secretary of Labor with respect to the enforcement of such standards.

Section 607. Appropriations; termination of program

Subsection (a) authorizes the appropriation of the funds necessary to carry out the new title VI, and provides that all funds so appropriated will remain available until expended.

Subsection (b) provides a cutoff date of October 1, 1969, for the title VI program.

TITLE VII—FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

Section 701. Increase in FNMA special assistance authority

Subsection (a) amends section 305(c) of the National Housing Act to increase the amount of special assistance which the President can authorize FNMA to provide for housing and community development (presently $1,700 million) by $100 million on the enactment of the bill, by $450 million on July 1, 1966, by $550 million on July 1, 1967, and by $525 million on July 1, 1968 (for a total increase of $1,625 million).

Subsection (b) amends section 305(f) of the act to provide for the transfer to and merger with FNMA's regular special assistance authority of the balance (approximately $220 million) of the amount of special assistance authorized for housing for the military, NASA, and AEC financed with FHA title VIII insured mortgages.

Section 702. Increase in limitation on mortgages for dwelling units having four or more bedrooms

This section amends section 302(b) of the National Housing Act to increase the maximum amount of a mortgage which FNMA can purchase in its special assistance program by an additional $2,500 per dwelling unit (from $17,500 to $20,000) in the case of dwelling units having four or more bedrooms.

TITLE VIII—OPEN-SPACE LAND AND URBAN BEAUTIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT

Section 801. Change in name of program; findings and purpose

This section changes the name of the existing open-space land program (title VII of the Housing Act of 1961) so that it will include a reference to "urban beautification and improvement," thus reflecting the proposed new program of grants for urban beautification and improvement (described below). It also expands the existing statement of congressional findings and purpose so as to reflect the need for this new program as well as the proposed new program (also described below) to provide open-space land in built-up urban areas.

Section 802. Increased grant level for preservation of open-space land

This section amends section 702(a) of the 1961 act to increase from 20 to 30 percent of the land acquisition cost (and from 30 to 40 percent of such cost in cases to which the higher rate is applicable) the maximum amount of any grant which may be made under the existing title VII program for the preservation of open-space land.

Section 803. Substitution of appropriation authority for grant contract authority

This section amends section 702 of the 1961 act to eliminate the present $75 million contract authority for grants under title VII of the 1961 act and substitute authority for the appropriation of such amounts (without dollar limit) as may be necessary to carry out the title. This authorization would apply to all aspects of the open-space program in the existing title VII as well as to the two proposed new grant programs discussed below. The bill also provides a cutoff date of October 1, 1969, for the programs under title VII of the 1961 act.

Section 804. Grants for provision of open space land in built-up urban areas

This section adds to title VII of the 1961 act a new section 705, authorizing the Housing Administrator to make grants to States and local public bodies to assist them in the acquisition of developed land in built-up portions of urban areas for clearance and use as open-space land. Grants for this purpose (which could not exceed $500,000 or 40 percent of the acquisition and demolition cost) could be made only where adequate open-space land cannot effectively be provided through the use of existing undeveloped land and the proposed acquisition is important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality. Such grants could include relocation payments for individuals, families, business concerns, and nonprofit organizations displaced by projects assisted under the title VIII programs.

Section 805. Grants for urban beautification and improvement

This section adds to title VII of the 1961 act a new section 706, authorizing the Administrator to make grants to States and local public bodies to assist in carrying out local programs (utilizing all available public and private resources for the beautification of the land involved, and important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality) for the greater use and enjoyment of open-space and other public land in urban areas. Such a grant could not exceed 40 percent of the amount by which the community's activities under the program during any fiscal year exceeds its usual expenditures for comparable activities; except that up to $5 million of the available funds could be used in making 100-percent grants for activities determined by the Administrator to have special value in developing and demonstrating new and improved methods and materials for urban beautification and improvement.

Section 806. Labor standards

This section adds to title VII of the 1961 act a new section 707, making applicable to construction work financed with assistance under such title the prevailing wage standards of the Davis-Bacon Act (and the usual time-and-a-half overtime provisions), along with the authority generally available to the Secretary of Labor with respect to the enforcement of such standards and provisions.

Section 807. Use of funds for studies and publication

This section amends title VII of the 1961 act to permit the Administrator to use open-space grant appropriations (up to $100,000 per year) for undertaking and publishing open-space surveys and other studies in connection with title VII activities. (Under existing law such studies and publications must be financed through separate appropriations.)

Section 808. Conforming amendments

This section makes necessary technical and conforming amendments in various provisions of title VII of the 1961 act to reflect the inclusion of the two new grant programs.

TITLE IX—RURAL HOUSING

Section 901. Loans for previously occupied buildings and minimum site acquisition

This section amends section 501 of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans to farmers and rural residents for the purchase of previously occupied dwellings and related facilities and farm service buildings and for minimum adequate building sites.

Section 902. Interest rate on direct rural housing loans

This section amends section 502(a) of the Housing Act of 1949 to increase to 5 percent the maximum interest rate on direct loans under section 502, except for loans to elderly persons in accordance with section 501(a)(3) and loans in accordance with sections 503 and 504, which would remain at 4 percent. It would also authorize the Secretary to charge fees on all title V loans.

Section 903. Insured rural housing loans

Subsection (a) of this section adds to title V of the Housing Act of 1949 two new sections (517 and 518).

The new section 517 would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to insure loans, and make loans to be sold insured, in accordance with section 502; except that such loans to persons of low or moderate income would bear interest not above 5 percent and be limited to adequate housing modest in size, design, and cost and to an aggregate of $300 million per year, and such loans to other persons would be made at rates and charges comparable to those in effect under FHA's section 203 program. To assure the marketability of these loans to private investors within the interest ceiling set by this section, it is further provided that the Secretary may enter into a repurchase agreement with the investor but in no event could the agreement be for less than 5 years.

The new section 517 would also establish a new rural housing insurance fund to finance insured section 502 loans and to be utilized by the Secretary for various specified purposes. The new fund would be used in lieu of the agricultural credit insurance fund for section 514 domestic farm labor housing and section 515(b) elderly rental housing loans. Loans made out of the fund and held unsold could not exceed $100 million at any one time. The Secretary would be authorized to borrow from the Treasury to meet loan insurance obligations and to make other authorized expenditures from the fund.

The new section 518 would establish a rural housing direct loan account, and would transfer to such account all rural housing direct loans made under sections 502, 503, 504, and 515(a) of the 1949 act, all collections therefrom, and any funds available from appropriations or Treasury borrowings for such loans. Amounts transferred to the account and such further amounts as may be appropriated would be available for making loans under the above sections and for making repayments to the Treasury.

Subsection (b) of section 903 of the bill amends section 511 of the Housing Act of 1949 to extend for 4 years (to October 1, 1969) the unused balance (approximately $101 million) of the existing borrowing authority under section 511, and to remove the existing special reservation of $50 million exclusively for loans to elderly persons in accordance with section 501(a)(3).

Section 904. Federal National Mortgage Association secondary market operations for insured rural housing loans

This section amends title III of the National Housing Act to authorize FNMA to purchase loans insured under the new provisions of title V of the Housing Act of 1949 in its secondary market operations.

Section 905. Extension of rural housing authorizations

This section amends title V of the Housing Act of 1949 to extend for 4 years (to October 1, 1969) the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make section 503 loan contribution commitments, the authority for appropriations to finance assistance under sections 504(a), 504(b), 506, and 516, and the authority of the Secretary to make section 515(b) rental housing loans for elderly persons. It would also increase from $10 to $50 million the total amount of appropriations authorized for section 516 assistance to provide low-rent housing for domestic farm labor, and would extend the construction standards and technical services provisions of section 506(a) to operations under the new provisions added to title V by the bill.

Section 906. Payment of interest to the Treasury on appropriations for rural housing loans

This section adds to title V of the Housing Act of 1949 a new section 519, directing the Secretary of Agriculture to pay into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury any surpluses from the new rural housing insurance fund or the new rural housing direct loan account. It would also provide for payment to the Treasury of interest on any portions of future appropriations to such fund or account for the purpose of making loans until returned to miscellaneous receipts.

TITLE X—MISCELLANEOUS

Section 1001. Authorization for urban planning grants

This section amends section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954 to eliminate the existing $105 million ceiling on the total amount authorized to be appropriated for urban planning grants thereunder, at the same time adding a provision which terminates the program as of October 1, 1969.

Section 1002. Authorization for Federal-State training programs

This section amends section 802 of the Housing Act of 1964 to eliminate the existing $10 million ceiling on the total amount authorized to be appropriated for grants to States for the Federal-State training program under part 1 of title VIII of such act, at the same time adding a provision which terminates the program as of October 1, 1969.

Section 1003. Authorization for public works planning advances

This section amends section 702 of the Housing Act of 1954 to eliminate the existing ceiling on the total amount which may be appropriated for advances under the 1954 planning advance program, at the same time adding a provision terminating the authority to make advances under the program as of October 1, 1969.

Section 1004. Advisory committees—Technical provision

This section eliminates from section 601 of the Housing Act of 1949 (relating to HHFA advisory committees) a provision which has become obsolete.

Section 1005. Public facility loans to nonprofit corporations

This section amends section 202 of the Housing Amendments of 1955 (the community facilities program) to permit the Housing Administrator to make loans to private nonprofit corporations to finance the construction of works for the storage, treatment, purification, or distribution of water, or the construction of sewage, sewage treatment, and sewer facilities, if such works or facilities are needed to serve communities with a population of less than 10,000 and no existing public body is able to construct and operate them.

Section 1006. FHA conforming amendments

This section amends various provisions of the National Housing Act to reflect the consolidation of FHA insurance funds into the general insurance fund under section 208 of the bill.

Section 1007. Savings and loan associations

This section amends section 5(c) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 to permit savings and loan associations (1) to make loans on the security of buildings to be used as college dormitories or fraternity or sorority houses, or to be used for residential purposes by the staffs of community hospitals, and (2) to make loans on the security of leaseholds under certain conditions. It would also confer upon District of Columbia associations the same powers with respect to the investment of assets as are authorized for Federal savings and loan associations.

Section 1008. Urban renewal project in Johnson City, Tenn.

This section permits certain electrical installations to be counted as local noncash grants-in-aid for an urban renewal project in Johnson City, Tenn.

Section 1009. Repayment of certain planning grants

This section waives repayment of public works planning advances which were used for projects built under the accelerated public works program and have neither been previously waived nor repaid.

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW MADE BY THE BILL, AS REPORTED

In compliance with clause 3 of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in existing law made by the bill, as reported, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italic, existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

INSURANCE OF FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

SEC. 2. (a) The Commissioner is authorized and empowered upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to insure banks, trust companies, personal finance companies, mortgage companies, building and loan associations, installment lending companies, and other such financial institutions, which the Commissioner finds to be qualified by experience or facilities and approves as eligible for credit insurance, against losses which they may sustain as a result of loans and advances of credit, and purchases of obligations representing loans and advances of credit, made by them on and after July 1, 1939, and prior to October 1, [1965] 1969, for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and improvements upon or in connection with existing structures, and the building of new structures, upon urban, suburban, or rural real property (including the restoration, rehabilitation, rebuilding, and replacement of such improvements which have been damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, hurricane, cyclone, flood, or other catastrophe), by the owners thereof or by lessees of such real property under a lease expiring not less than six months after the maturity of the loan or advance of credit. In no case shall the insurance granted by the Commissioner under this section to any such financial institution on loans, advances of credit, and purchases made by such financial institution for such purposes on and after July 1, 1939, exceed 10 per centum of the total amount of such loans, advances of credit, and purchases: Provided, That with respect to any loan, advance of credit, or purchase made after the effective date of the Housing Act of 1954, the amount of any claim for loss on any such individual loan, advance of credit, or purchase paid by the Commissioner under the provisions of this section to a lending institution shall not exceed 90 per centum of such loss.

After the effective date of the Housing Act of 1954, (i) the Commissioner shall not enter into contracts for insurance pursuant to this section except with lending institutions which are subject to the inspection and supervision of a governmental agency required by law to make periodic examinations of their books and accounts, and which the Commissioner finds to be qualified by experience or facilities to make and service such loans, advances or purchases, and with such other lending institutions which the Commissioner approves as eligible for insurance pursuant to this section on the basis of their credit and their experience or facilities to make and service such loans, advances or purchases; (ii) only such items as substantially protect or improve the basic livability or utility of properties shall be eligible for financing under this section, and therefore the Commissioner shall from time to time declare ineligible for financing under this section any item, product, alteration, repair, improvement, or class thereof which he determines would not substantially protect or improve the basic livability or utility of such properties, and he may also declare ineligible for financing under this section any item which he determines is especially subject to selling abuses; and (iii) the Commissioner is hereby authorized and directed, by such regulations or procedures as he shall deem advisable, to prevent the use of any financial assistance under this section (1) with respect to new residential structures that have not been completed and occupied for at least six months, or (2) which would, through multiple loans, result in an outstanding aggregate loan balance with respect to the same structure exceeding the dollar amount limitation prescribed in this subsection for the type of loan involved: Provided, That this clause (iii) may in the discretion of the Commissioner be waived with respect to the period of occupancy or completion of any such new residential structures.

* * * * *

(f) The Commissioner shall fix a premium charge for the insurance hereafter granted under this section, but in the case of any obligation representing any loan, advance of credit, or purchase, such premium charge shall not exceed an amount equivalent to 1 per centum per annum of the net proceeds of such loan, advance of credit, or purchase, for the term of such obligation, and such premium charge shall be payable in advance by the financial institution and shall be paid at such time and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner. [The moneys derived from such premium charges and all moneys collected by the Commissioner as fees of any kind in connection with the granting of insurance as provided in this section, and all moneys derived from the sale, collection, disposition, or compromise of any evidence of debt, contract, claim, property, or security assigned to or held by the Commissioner as provided in subsection (c) of this section with respect to insurance granted on and after July 1, 1939, shall be deposited in an account in the Treasury of the United States, which account shall be available for defraying the operating expenses of the Federal Housing Administration under this section, and any amounts in such account which are not needed for such purpose may be used for the payment of claims in connection with the insurance granted under this section. The account heretofore established in connection with insurance operations under this section and identified in the accounting records of the Federal Housing Administration as the Title I Claims Account shall be terminated as of August 1, 1954, at which time all of the remaining assets of such account, together with deposits therein for the account of obligors, shall be transferred to and merged with the account established pursuant to this subsection. Moneys in the account established pursuant to this subsection not needed for the current operations of the Federal Housing Administration may be invested in bonds or other obligations of, or in bonds or other obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States.】

(i) The Commissioner is authorized to insure under this section, any mortgage meeting the requirements of subsection (b) of this section, except as modified by this subsection, which involves a principal obligation not in excess of [$11,000] $12,500 and not in excess of 97 per centum (or, in any case where the dwelling is not approved for mortgage insurance prior to the beginning of construction, unless the construction of the dwelling was completed more than one year prior to the application for mortgage insurance or the dwelling was approved for guaranty, insurance, or direct loan under chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code, prior to the beginning of construction, 90 per centum) of the appraised value of a property located in an area where the Commissioner finds it is not practicable to obtain conformity with many of the requirements essential to the insurance of mortgages on housing in built-up urban areas, upon which there is located a dwelling designed principally for a single-family residence: Provided, That if the mortgagor is not the occupant of the property at the time of insurance, the principal obligation of the mortgage shall not exceed 85 per centum of the appraised value of the property: Provided further, That the Commissioner finds that the property with respect to which the mortgage is executed is an acceptable risk, giving consideration to the need for providing adequate housing for families of low and moderate income particularly in suburban and outlying areas or small communities: Provided further, That under the foregoing provisions of this subsection the Commissioner is authorized to insure any mortgage issued with respect to a farm home on a plot of land five or more acres in size adjacent to a public highway.

(j) Loans secured by mortgages insured under this section shall not be taken into account in determining the amount of real estate loans which a national bank may make in relation to its capital and surplus or its time and savings deposits.

(k) To supplement the mortgage insurance provisions of this section in order to assist the conservation, improvement, and alteration of housing, the Commissioner is authorized to make commitments to insure and to insure a home improvement loan (including advances during construction or improvement) under this subsection in accordance with the provisions of section 220(h), except that (1) the structures improved shall be designed for occupancy by not more than four families and shall not be required to be located in the area of an urban renewal project, (2) the Commissioner shall find that the project with respect to which the loan is executed is an acceptable risk, (3) all funds received and all disbursements made shall be credited or charged, as appropriate, to [a separate Section 203 Home Improvement Account to be maintained as hereinafter provided under the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund, and (4) insurance benefits shall be paid in cash out of [the Section 203 Home Improvement Account or in debentures executed in the name of such Account] the General Insurance Fund or in debentures executed in the name of such Fund. For the purposes of this subsection, the Commissioner shall have all the authority provided in section 220(h). Insurance benefits paid with respect to loans insured under this subsection shall be paid in accordance with sections 220(h)(6) and 220(h)(7), except that as applied to those loans references in section 220(h) to "this subsection" shall be construed to refer to this section 203(k) [, references to the Section 220 Home Improvement Account shall be construed to refer to the Section 203 Home Improvement Account, and references to the Section 220 Housing Insurance Fund shall be construed to refer to the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund]. [All of the provisions in section 220(h)(4) relative to the Section 220 Home Improvement Account shall be equally applicable to the Section 203 Home Improvement Account. There is hereby created a separate Section 203 Home Improvement Account under the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund which shall be used by the Commissioner as a revolving fund for carrying out the provisions of this subsection, and the Commissioner is authorized to transfer to such Account the sum of $1,000,000 from the War Housing Insurance Fund established pursuant to the provisions of section 602 of this Act. The provisions of section 205(c) shall not be applicable to loans insured under this subsection.] If the insurance payment is made in cash, there shall be added to such payment an amount equivalent to the interest which the debentures would have earned, computed to a date to be established pursuant to regulations issued by the Commissioner.

PAYMENT OF INSURANCE

SEC. 204. (a) In any case in which the mortgagee under a mortgage insured under section 203 [or section 210] shall have foreclosed and taken possession of the mortgaged property in accordance with regulations of, and within a period to be determined by, the Commissioner, or shall, with the consent of the Commissioner, have otherwise acquired such property from the mortgagor after default, the mortgagee shall be entitled to receive the benefit of the insurance as hereinafter provided, upon (1) the prompt conveyance to the Commissioner of title to the property which meets the requirements of rules and regulations of the Commissioner in force at the time the mortgage was insured, and which is evidenced in the manner prescribed by such rules and regulations, and (2) the assignment to him of all claims of the mortgagee against the mortgagor or others, arising out of the mortgage transaction or foreclosure proceedings, except such claims as may have been released with the consent of the Commissioner. Upon such conveyance and assignment the obligation of the mortgagee to pay the premium charges for insurance shall cease and the Commissioner shall, subject to the cash adjustment hereinafter provided, issue to the mortgagee debentures having a total face value equal to the value of the mortgage and (subject to subsection (e)(2)) a certificate of claim, as hereinafter provided. For the purposes of this subsection, the value of the mortgage shall be determined, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, by adding to the amount of the original principal obligation of the mortgage which was unpaid on the date of the institution of foreclosure proceedings, or on the date of the acquisition of the property after default other than by foreclosure, the amount of all payments which have been made by the mortgagee for taxes, ground rents, and water rates, which are liens prior to the mortgage, special assessments which are noted on the application for insurance or which become liens after the insurance of the mortgage, charges for the administration, operation, maintenance and repair of community-owned property or the maintenance and repair of the mortgaged property, the obligation for which arises out of a covenant filed for record and approved by the Commissioner prior to the insurance of the mortgage, insurance on the mortgaged property, and any mortgage insurance premiums, and any tax imposed by the United States upon any deed or other instrument by which said property was acquired by the mortgagee and transferred or conveyed to the Commissioner, and by deducting from such total amount any amount received on account of the mortgage after either of such dates, and any amount received as rent or other income from the property, less reasonable expenses incurred in handling the property, after either of such dates: Provided, That with respect to mortgages which are accepted for insurance under section 203(b)(2)(B) of this Act, and which are foreclosed before there shall have been paid on account of the principal obligation of the mortgage a sum equal to 10 per centum of the appraised value of the property as of the date the mortgage was accepted for insurance, there may be included in the debentures issued by the Commissioner, on account of foreclosure costs actually paid by the mortgagee and approved by the Commissioner an amount not in excess of 2 per centum of the unpaid principal of the mortgage as of the date of the institution of foreclosure proceedings, but in no event in excess of $75: And provided further, That with respect to mortgages which are accepted for insurance under section 203(b)(2)(D) or under the second proviso of section 207(c)(2) of this Act, or under section 213 of this Act, or with respect to any mortgage accepted for insurance under section 203 on or after the effective date of the Housing Act of 1954, there may be included in the debentures issued by the Commissioner on account of the cost of foreclosure (or of acquiring the property by other means) actually paid by the mortgagee and approved by the Commissioner an amount, not in excess of two-thirds of such cost or $75 whichever is the greater: And provided further, That with respect to a mortgage accepted for insurance pursuant to a commitment issued on or after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964, the Commissioner may include in debentures or in the cash payment an amount not to exceed the foreclosure, acquisition, and conveyance costs actually paid by the mortgagee and approved by the Commissioner: And provided further, That with respect to a mortgage accepted for insurance pursuant to a commitment issued prior to the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964, the Commissioner may, with the consent of the mortgagee (in lieu of issuing a certificate of claim as provided in subsection (e)), include in debentures or in the cash payment, in addition to amounts otherwise allowed for such costs, an amount not to exceed one-third of the total foreclosure, acquisition, and conveyance costs actually paid by the mortgagee and approved by the Commissioner, but in no event may the total allowance for such costs exceed the amount actually paid by the mortgagee: And provided further, That with respect to mortgages to which the provisions of sections 302 and 306 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, as now or hereafter amended, apply and which are insured under section 203 of the National Housing Act, as now or hereafter amended, and subject to such regulations and conditions as the Commissioner may prescribe, there shall be included in the debentures an amount which the Commissioner finds to be sufficient to compensate the mortgagee for any loss which it may have sustained on account of interest on debentures by reason of its having postponed the institution of foreclosure proceedings or the acquisition of the property by other means during any part or all of the period of such military service and three months thereafter: And provided further, That where the claim is paid in cash there shall be included in the cash payment an amount equivalent to the compensation for loss of debenture interest that would be included in computing debentures if such claim were being paid in debentures: And provided further, That with respect to any mortgage covering a one-, two-, three-, or four-family residence insured under this Act, if the Commissioner finds, after notice of default, that the default was due to circumstances beyond the control of the mortgagor, he may, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, (1) approve the request of the mortgagee for an extension of the time for the curing of the default and of the time for commencing foreclosure proceedings or for otherwise acquiring title to the mortgaged property to such time as the Commissioner may determine is necessary and desirable to enable the mortgagor to complete the mortgage payments, including an extension of time beyond the stated maturity of the mortgage, and in the event of a subsequent foreclosure or acquisition of the property by other means the Commissioner is authorized to include in the debentures an amount equal to any unpaid mortgage interest, or (2) approve a modification of the terms of the mortgage for the purpose of changing the amortization provisions by recasting, over the remaining term of the mortgage or over such longer period as may be approved by the Commissioner, the total unpaid amount then due, as determined by the Commissioner, with the modification to become effective currently or to become effective upon the termination of an agreed-upon extension of the period for curing the default; and the principal amount of the mortgage, as modified, shall be considered to be the "original principal obligation of the mortgage" as that term is used in this Act for the purpose of computing the total face value of the debentures to be issued or the cash payment to be made by the Commissioner to a mortgagee: And provided further, That, notwithstanding any requirement contained in this Act that debentures may be issued only upon acquisition of title and possession by the mortgagee and its subsequent conveyance and transfer to the Commissioner, and for the purpose of avoiding unnecessary conveyance expense in connection with payment of insurance benefits under the provisions of this Act, the Commissioner is authorized, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to permit the mortgagee to tender to the Commissioner a satisfactory conveyance of title and transfer of possession direct from the mortgagor or other appropriate grantor and to pay the insurance benefits to the mortgagee which it would otherwise be entitled to if such conveyance had been made to the mortgagee and from the mortgagee to the Commissioner.

(b) The Commissioner may at any time, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, consent to the release of the mortgagor from his liability under the mortgage or the credit instrument secured thereby, or consent to the release of parts of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage.

(c) Debentures issued under this section shall be in such form and denominations in multiples of $50, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall include such provisions for redemption, if any, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and may be in coupon or registered form. Any difference between the value of the mortgage determined as herein provided and the aggregate face value of the debentures issued, not to exceed $350, shall be adjusted by the payment of cash by the Commissioner to the mortgagee [from the Fund as to mortgages insured under section 203 and from the Housing Fund as to mortgages insured under section 210] from the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund.

(d) The debentures issued under this section to any mortgagee with respect to mortgages insured under section 203 shall be executed in the name of the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund as obligor, shall be signed by the Commissioner by either his written or engraved signature, and shall be negotiable [and the debentures issued under this section to any mortgagee with respect to mortgages insured under section 210 shall be executed in the name of the Housing Insurance Fund as obligor, shall be signed by the Commissioner by either his written or engraved signature, and shall be negotiable]. All such debentures shall be dated as of the date foreclosure proceedings were instituted, or the property was otherwise acquired by the mortgagee after default: Provided, That debentures issued pursuant to claims for insurance filed on or after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964 shall be dated as of the date of default or as of such later date as the Commissioner, in his discretion, may establish by regulation.

The debentures shall bear interest from such date at a rate established by the Commissioner pursuant to section 224, payable semiannually on the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July of each year, and shall mature twenty years after the date thereof. Such debentures as are issued in exchange for property covered by mortgages insured under section 203 or section 207 prior to the date of enactment of the National Housing Act Amendments of 1938 shall be subject only to such Federal, State, and local taxes as the mortgages in exchange for which they are issued would be subject to in the hands of the holder of the debentures and shall be a liability of [the Fund] the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund, but such debentures shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States; but any mortgagee entitled to receive any such debentures may elect to receive in lieu thereof a cash adjustment and debentures issued as hereinafter provided and bearing the current rate of interest. Such debentures as are issued in exchange for property covered by mortgages insured after the date of enactment of the National Housing Act Amendments of 1938 shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtax, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority; and such debentures shall be paid out of [the Fund, or the Housing Fund, as the case may be,] the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund which shall be primarily liable therefor, and they shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face of the debentures. In the event that [the Fund or the Housing Fund] the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund fails to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of or interest on any debentures issued under this section, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holders the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such debentures.

(e)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the certificate of claim issued by the Commissioner to any mortgagee shall be for an amount which the Commissioner determines to be sufficient, when added to the face value of the debentures issued and the cash adjustment paid to the mortgagee, to equal to the amount which the mortgagee would have received if, at the time of the conveyance to the Commissioner of the property covered by the mortgage, the mortgagor had redeemed the property and paid in full all obligations under the mortgage and a reasonable amount for necessary expenses incurred by the mortgagee in condition with the foreclosure proceedings, or the acquisition of the mortgaged property otherwise, and the conveyance thereof to the Commissioner. Each such certificate of claim shall provide that there shall accrue to the holder of such certificate with respect to the face amount of such certificate, an increment at the rate of 3 per centum per annum which shall not be compounded. The amount to which the holder of any such certificate shall be entitled shall be determined as provided in subsection (f).

(2) A certificate of claim shall not be issued and the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not be applicable in the case of a mortgage accepted for insurance pursuant to a commitment issued on or after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964.

(f)(1) If, after deducting (in such manner and amount as the Commissioner shall determine to be equitable and in accordance with sound accounting practice) the expenses incurred by the Commissioner, the net amount realized from any property conveyed to the Commissioner under this section and the claims assigned therewith exceed the face value of the debentures issued and the cash paid in exchange for such property plus all interest paid on such debentures, such excess shall be divided as follows:

(i) If such excess is greater than the total amount payable under the certificate of claim issued in connection with such property, the Commissioner shall pay to the holder of such certificate the full amount so payable, and any excess remaining thereafter shall be paid to the mortgagor of such property if the mortgage was insured under section 203 [and shall be retained by the Commissioner and credited to the Housing Insurance Fund if the mortgage was insured under section 207]: Provided, That on and after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964, any excess remaining after payment to the holder of the full amount of the certificate of claim, together with the accrued interest increment thereon, shall be retained by the Commissioner and credited to the applicable insurance fund; and

(ii) If such excess is equal to or less than the total amount payable under such certificate of claim, the Commissioner shall pay to the holder of such certificate the full amount of such excess.

* * * * *

(b) In addition to mortgages insured under section 203, the Commissioner is authorized to insure mortgages as defined in this section (including advances on such mortgages during construction) which cover property held by—

(1) Federal or State instrumentalities, municipal corporate instrumentalities of one or more States, or limited dividend or redevelopment or housing corporations restricted by Federal or State laws or regulations, of State banking or insurance departments as to rents, charges, capital structure, rate of return, or methods of operation; or

(2) any other mortgagor approved by the Commissioner which, until the termination of all obligations of the Commissioner under the insurance and during such further period of time as the Commissioner shall be the owner, holder, or reinsurer of the mortgage, is regulated or restricted by the Commissioner as to rents or sales, charges, capital structure, rate of return, and methods of operation to such extent and in such manner as to provide reasonable rentals to tenants and a reasonable return on the investment. The Commissioner may make such contracts with and acquire, for not to exceed $100, such stock or interest in the mortgagor as he may deem necessary to render effective the regulations or restrictions. The stock or interest acquired by the Commissioner shall be paid for out of [the Housing Fund] the General Insurance Fund, and shall be redeemed by the mortgagor at par upon the termination of all obligations of the Commissioner under the insurance.

The insurance of mortgages under this section is intended to facilitate particularly the production of rental accommodations, at reasonable rents, of design and size suitable for family living. The Commissioner is, therefore, authorized and directed in the administration of this section to take action, by regulation or otherwise, which will direct the benefits of mortgage insurance hereunder primarily to those projects which make adequate provision for families with children, and in which every effort has been made to achieve moderate rental charges.

Notwithstanding any other provisions of this section, no mortgage shall be insured hereunder unless the mortgagor certifies under oath in selecting tenants for the property covered by the mortgage he will not discriminate against any family by reason of the fact that there are children in the family, and that he will not sell the property while the insurance is in effect unless the purchaser so certifies, such certification to be filed with the Commissioner. Violation of any such certification shall be a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not to exceed $500.

(c) To be eligible for insurance under this section a mortgage on any property or project shall involve a principal obligation in an amount—

* * * * *

(3) not to exceed, for such part of the property or project as may be attributable to dwelling use (excluding exterior land improvements as defined by the Commissioner), $9,000 per family unit without a bedroom, $12,500 per family unit with one bedroom, $15,000 per family unit with two bedrooms, [and $18,500 per family unit with three or more bedrooms] $18,500 per family unit with three bedrooms, and $21,000 per family unit with four or more bedrooms or not to exceed $1,800 per space or $500,000 per mortgage for trailer courts or parks; except that as to projects to consist of elevator-type structures the Commissioner may, in his discretion, increase the dollar amount limitations per family unit to not to exceed $10,500 per family unit without a bedroom, $15,000 per family unit with one bedroom, $18,000 per family unit with two bedrooms, [and $22,500 per family unit with three or more bedrooms] $22,500 per family unit with three bedrooms, and $25,500 per family unit with four or more bedrooms, as the case may be, to compensate for the higher costs incident to the construction of elevator-type structures of sound standards of construction and design; and except that the Commissioner may, by regulation, increase any of the foregoing dollar amount limitations contained in this paragraph by not to exceed 45 per centum in any geographical area where he finds that cost levels so require.

* * * * *

(d) The Commissioner shall collect a premium charge for the insurance of mortgages under this section [and section 210] which shall be payable annually in advance by the mortgagee, either in cash or in debentures [of the Housing Insurance Fund issued by the Commissioner under this title] issued by the Commissioner under any title and section of this Act, except debentures of the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund at par plus accrued interest. In addition to the premium charge herein provided for, the Commissioner is authorized to charge and collect such amounts as he may deem reasonable for the appraisal of a property or project offered for insurance and for the inspection of such property or project during construction: Provided, That such charges for appraisal and inspection shall not aggregate more than 1 per centum of the original principal face amount of the mortgage.

* * * * *

[(f) There is hereby created a Housing Insurance Fund (herein referred to as the "Housing Fund") which shall be used by the Commissioner as a revolving fund for carrying out the provisions of this section and sections 210, 213, 231, and 232 and the Commissioner is hereby directed to transfer immediately to such Housing Fund the sum of $1,000,000 from that part of the Fund now held by him arising from appraisal fees heretofore collected by him. General expenses of operations of the Federal Housing Administration under this section and sections 210, 213, 231, and 232 may be charged to the Housing Fund.]

* * * * *

(h) The certificate of claim issued under this section shall be for an amount which the Commissioner determines to be sufficient, when added to the face value of the debentures issued and the cash adjustment paid to the mortgagee, to equal the amount which the mortgagee would have received if, on the date of the assignment, transfer and delivery to the Commissioner provided for in subsection (g), the mortgagor had extinguished the mortgage indebtedness by payment in full of all obligations under the mortgage and a reasonable amount for necessary expenses incurred by the mortgagee in connection with the foreclosure proceedings, or the acquisition of the mortgaged property otherwise, and the conveyance thereof to the Commissioner. Each such certificate of claim shall provide that there shall accrue to the holder of such certificate with respect to the face amount of such certificate, an increment at the rate of 3 per centum per annum which shall not be compounded. If the net amount realized from the mortgage, and all claims in connection therewith, so assigned, transferred, and delivered, and from the property covered by such mortgage and all claims in connection with such property after deducting all expenses incurred by the Commissioner in handling, dealing with, acquiring title to, and disposing of such mortgage and property and in collecting such claims, exceeds the face value of the debentures issued and the cash adjustment paid to the mortgagee plus all interest paid on such debentures, such excess shall be divided as follows:

(1) If such excess is greater than the total amount payable under the certificate of claim issued in connection with such property, the Commissioner shall pay to the holder of such certificate the full amount so payable, and any excess remaining thereafter shall be retained by the Commissioner and credited to [the Housing Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund; and

(2) If such excess is equal to or less than the total amount payable under such certificate of claim, the Commissioner shall pay to the holder of such certificate the full amount of such excess.

(i) Debentures issued under this section, except that debentures issued pursuant to the provisions of section 220(f), 221(g), and section 233 may be dated as of the date the mortgage is assigned (or the property is conveyed) to the Commissioner, shall be executed in the name of [the Housing Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund

as obligor, shall be signed by the Commissioner, by either his written or engraved signature, shall be negotiable, and shall be dated as of the date of default as determined in subsection (g) of this section and shall bear interest from such date. They shall bear interest at a rate established by the Commissioner pursuant to section 224, payable semiannually on the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July of each year, and shall mature twenty years after the date thereof. Such debentures as are issued in exchange for mortgages insured after the date of enactment of the National Housing Act Amendments of 1938 shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. They shall be paid out of [the Housing Fund] the General Insurance Fund which shall be primarily liable therefor and they shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face of the debentures. In the event [the Housing Fund] the General Insurance Fund fails to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of or interest on any debentures so guaranteed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holders the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon, to the extent of the amount so paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such debentures.

(j) Debentures issued under this section shall be in such form and denominations in multiples of $50, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall include such provision for redemption, if any, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and may be in coupon or registered form. Any difference between the amount of debentures to which the mortgagee is entitled under this section, and the aggregate face value of the debentures issued, not to exceed $50, shall be adjusted by the payment of cash by the Commissioner to the mortgagee from [the Housing Fund] the General Insurance Fund.

(k) The Commissioner is hereby authorized either to (1) acquire possession of and title to any property, covered by a mortgage insured under this section and assigned to him, by voluntary conveyance in extinguishment of the mortgage indebtedness, or (2) institute proceedings for foreclosure on the property covered by any such insured mortgage and prosecute such proceedings to conclusion. The Commissioner at any sale under foreclosure may, in his discretion, for the protection of [the Housing Fund], the General Insurance Fund, bid any sum up to but not in excess of the total unpaid indebtedness secured by the mortgage, plus taxes, insurance, foreclosure costs, fees, and other expenses, and may become the purchaser of the property at such sale. The Commissioner is authorized to pay from [the Housing Fund] the General Insurance Fund such sums as may be necessary to defray such taxes, insurance, costs, fees, and other expenses in connection with the acquisition or foreclosure of property under this section. Pending such acquisition by voluntary conveyance or by foreclosure, the Commissioner is authorized, with respect to any mortgage assigned to him under the provisions of subsection (g), to exercise all the rights of a mortgagee under such mortgage, including the right to sell such mortgage, and to take such action and advance such sums as may be necessary to preserve or protect the lien of such mortgage.

(l) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law relating to the acquisition, handling, or disposal of real and other property by the United States, the Commissioner shall also have power, for the protection of the interests of [the Housing Fund] the General Insurance Fund to pay out of [the Housing Fund] the General Insurance Fund all expenses or charges in connection with, and to deal with, complete, reconstruct, rent, renovate, modernize, insure, make contracts for the management of, or establish suitable agencies for the management of, or sell for cash or credit or lease in his discretion, any property acquired by him under this section; and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commissioner shall also have power to pursue to final collection by way of compromise or otherwise all claims assigned and transferred to him in connection with the assignment, transfer, and delivery provided for in this section, and at any time, upon default, to foreclose on any property secured by any mortgage assigned and transferred to or held by him: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not be construed to apply to any contract for hazard insurance, or to any purchase or contract for services or supplies on account of such property if the amount thereof does not exceed $1,000.

As to any project on which construction was commenced after the effective date of this subsection, the mortgage on such project shall be eligible for insurance under this section only in those cases where the construction was subject to inspection by the Commissioner and where there was compliance with the provisions of section 212 of this title. As to any project on which construction was commenced prior to the effective date of this subsection, such inspection, and compliance with the provisions of section 212 of this title, shall be a prerequisite.

(j) (1) With respect to any property covered by a mortgage insured under this section (or any cooperative housing project covered by a mortgage insured under section 207 as in effect prior to the enactment of the Housing Act of 1950), the Commissioner is authorized, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to make commitments to insure and to insure supplementary cooperative loans (including advances during construction or improvement) made by financial insti-

(B) Community facilities necessary to serve the occupants of the property or

(C) Cooperative purchases and resales of memberships in order to provide necessary refinancing for resales of memberships which involve increases in equity; but in such sales by the cooperative the downpayment by the new members shall not be less than those made on the original sales of such memberships.

(2) To be eligible for insurance under this subsection, a supplementary cooperative loan shall—

(A) be limited to an amount which, when added to the outstanding mortgage indebtedness on the property, creates a total outstanding indebtedness which does not exceed the original principal obligation of the mortgage;

(B) have a maturity satisfactory to the Commissioner but not to exceed the remaining term of the mortgage;

(C) be secured in such manner as the Commissioner may require;

(D) contain such other terms, conditions, and restrictions as the Commissioner may prescribe; and

(E) represent the obligation of a borrower of the character described in paragraph (1) of subsection (a).

(k) There is hereby created a Cooperative Management Housing Insurance Fund (hereinafter referred to as the "Management Fund"). The Management Fund shall be used by the Commissioner as a revolving fund for carrying out the provisions of this section with respect to mortgages or loans insured, on or after the date of the enactment of this subsection, under subsections (a)(1), (a)(3) (if the project is acquired by a cooperative corporation), (i), and (j). The Management Fund shall also be used as a revolving fund for mortgages, loans, and commitments transferred to it pursuant to subsection (m). The Commissioner is directed to transfer to the Management Fund from the General Insurance Fund established pursuant to section 519 such amount as the Commissioner determines to be necessary and appropriate. General expenses of operation of the Federal Housing Administration relating to mortgages or loans which are the obligation of the Management Fund may be charged to the Management Fund.

(l) The Commissioner shall establish in the Management Fund, as of the date of the enactment of this subsection, a General Surplus Account and a Participating Reserve Account. The aggregate net income thereafter received or any net loss thereafter sustained by the Management Fund, in any semiannual period, shall be credited or charged to the General Surplus Account or the Participating Reserve Account or both in such manner and amounts as the Commissioner may determine to be in accord with sound actuarial and accounting practice. Upon termination of the insurance obligation of the Management Fund by payment of any mortgage or loan insured under this section, and at such time or times prior to such termination as the Commissioner may determine, the Commissioner is authorized to distribute to the mortgagor or borrower a share of the Participating Reserve Account in such manner and amount as the Commissioner shall determine to be equitable and in accordance with sound actuarial and accounting practice: Provided, That in no event shall the amount of the distributable share exceed the aggregate scheduled annual premiums of the mortgagor or borrower to the year of payment of the share less the total amount of any share or shares previously distributed by the Commissioner to the mortgagor or borrower: And provided further, That in no event may a distributable share be distributed until any funds transferred from the General Insurance Fund to the Management Fund pursuant to subsection (k) or (o) have been repaid in full to the General Insurance Fund. No mortgagor, mortgagee, borrower, or lender shall have any vested right in a credit balance in any such account or to be subject to any liability arising out of the mutuality of the Management Fund. The determination of the Commissioner as to the amount to be paid by him to any mortgagor or borrower shall be final and conclusive.

(m) The Commissioner is authorized to transfer to the Management Fund commitments for insurance issued under subsections (a)(1), (i), and (j) prior to the date of the enactment of this subsection, and to transfer to the Management Fund the insurance of any mortgage or loan insured prior to the date of the enactment of this subsection under subsection (a)(1), (a)(3) (if the project is acquired by a cooperative corporation), (i), or (j), but only in cases where the consent of the mortgagee or lender to the transfer is obtained or a request by the mortgagee or lender for the transfer is received by the Commissioner within such period of time after the date of the enactment of this subsection as the Commissioner shall prescribe: Provided, That the insurance of any mortgage or loan shall not be transferred under the provisions of this subsection if on the date of the enactment of this subsection the mortgage or loan is in default and the mortgagee or lender has notified the Commissioner in writing of its intention to file an insurance claim. Any insurance or commitment not so transferred shall continue to be an obligation of the General Insurance Fund.

(n) Notwithstanding the limitations contained in other provisions of this Act, premium charges for mortgages or loans insured under this section and sections 207, 231, and 232 may be payable in debentures issued in connection with mortgages or loans transferred to the Management Fund or in connection with mortgages or loans insured pursuant to commitments transferred to the Management Fund, as provided in subsection (m) of this section.

(o) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Commissioner is authorized to transfer funds between the Cooperative Management Housing Insurance Fund and the General Insurance Fund in such amounts and at such times as he may determine, taking into consideration the requirements of each such Fund, to assist in carrying out effectively the insurance programs for which such Funds were respectively established.

(h)(1) To assist further in the conservation, improvement, repair, and rehabilitation of property located in the area of an urban renewal project, as provided in paragraph (1) of subsection (d) of this section, the Commissioner is authorized upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe to make commitments to insure and to insure home improvement loans (including advances during construction or improvement) made by financial institutions on and after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1961. As used in this subsection—

(A) the term "home improvement loan" means a loan, advance of credit, or purchase of an obligation representing a loan or advance of credit made—

(i) for the purpose of financing the improvement of an existing structure (or in connection with an existing structure) which was constructed not less than ten years prior to the making of such loan, advance of credit, or purchase, and which is used or will be used primarily for residential purposes: Provided, That a home improvement loan shall include a loan, advance, or purchase with respect to the improvement of a structure which was constructed less than ten years prior to the making of such loan, advance, or purchase if the proceeds are or will be used primarily for major structural improvements, or to correct defects which were not known at the time of the completion of the structure or which were caused by fire, flood, windstorm, or other casualty; or

(ii) for the purpose of enabling the borrower to pay that part of the cost of the construction or installation of sidewalks, curbs, gutters, street paving, street lights, sewers, or other public improvements, adjacent to or in the vicinity of property owned by him and used primarily for residential purposes, which is assessed against him or for which he is otherwise legally liable as the owner of such property;

(B) the term "improvement" means conservation, repair, restoration, rehabilitation, conversion, alteration, enlargement, or remodeling; and

(C) the term "financial institution" means a lender approved by the Commissioner as eligible for insurance under section 2 or a mortgagee approved under section 203(b)(1).

(2) To be eligible for insurance under this subsection, a home improvement loan shall—

(i) not exceed the Commissioner's estimate of the cost of improvement, or $10,000 per family unit, whichever is the lesser, and be limited as required by paragraph (11);

(ii) be limited to an amount which when added to any outstanding indebtedness related to the property (as determined by the Commissioner) creates a total outstanding indebtedness which does not exceed the limits provided in subsection (d)(3) for properties (of the same type) other than new construction;

(iii) bear interest at not to exceed a rate prescribed by the Commissioner, but not in excess of 6 per centum per annum of the amount of the principal obligation outstanding at any time, and such other charges (including such service charges, appraisal, inspection, and other fees) as may be approved by the Commissioner;

(iv) have a maturity satisfactory to the Commissioner, but not to exceed twenty years from the beginning of amortization of the loan or three-quarters of the remaining economic life of the structure, whichever is the lesser;

(v) comply with such other terms, conditions, and restrictions as the Commissioner may prescribe; and

(vi) represent the obligation of a borrower who is the owner of the property improved, or a lessee of the property under a lease for not less than 99 years which is renewable or under a lease having an expiration date in excess of 10 years later than the maturity date of the loan.

(3) Any home improvement loan insured under this subsection may be refinanced and extended in accordance with such terms and conditions as the Commissioner may prescribe, but in no event for an additional amount or term in excess of the maximum provided for in this subsection.

[(4) There is hereby created a separate Section 220 Home Improvement Account to be maintained under the Section 220 Housing Insurance Fund and to be used by the Commissioner as a revolving fund for carrying out the provisions of this subsection. The Commissioner is authorized to transfer to such Account the sum of $1,000,000 from the War Housing Insurance Fund established pursuant to the provisions of section 602 of this Act. Any premium charges, and appraisal and other fees received on account of the insurance of any home improvement loan accepted for insurance under this subsection, and the receipts derived from the sale, collection, deposit, or compromise of any evidence of debt, contract, claim, property, or security assigned to or held by the Commissioner in connection with the payment of insurance under this subsection, shall be credited to the Section 220 Home Improvement Account. Insurance claims under this subsection and expenses incurred in the handling, management, renovation, and disposal of any properties acquired by the Commissioner under this subsection shall be charged to the Section 220 Home Improvement Account. General expenses of operation of the Federal Housing Administration and other expenses incurred under this subsection may be charged to the Section 220 Home Improvement Account. Moneys in the Account not needed for the current operation of the Federal Housing Administration under this subsection shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of the Account, or invested in bonds or other obligations of, or in bonds or other obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States. In order to protect the solvency of the Section 220 Home Improvement Account, adequate security shall be taken in connection with loans insured under this subsection in such manner as the Commissioner may require.】

(5) The Commissioner is authorized to fix a premium charge for the insurance of home improvement loans under this subsection but in the case of any such loan such charge shall not be less than an amount equivalent to one-half of 1 per centum per annum nor more than an amount equivalent to 1 per centum per annum of the amount of the principal obligation of the loan outstanding at any time, without taking into account delinquent payments or prepayments. Such premium charges shall be payable by the financial institution either in cash or in debentures (at par plus accrued interest) issued by the Commissioner as obligations of 【the Section 220 Home Improvement Account】 the General Insurance Fund, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner, and the Commissioner may require the payment of one or more such premium charges at the time the loan is insured, at such discount rate as he may prescribe not in excess of the interest rate specified in the loan. If the Commissioner finds upon presentation of a loan for insurance and the tender of the initial premium charge or charges so required that the loan complies with the provisions of this subsection, such loan may be accepted for insurance by endorsement or otherwise as the Commissioner may prescribe. In the event the principal obligation of any loan accepted for insurance under this subsection is paid in full prior to the maturity date, the Commissioner is authorized to refund to the financial institution for the account of the borrower all, or such portions as the shall determine to be equitable, of the current unearned premium charges theretofore paid.

(6) In cases of defaults on loans insured under this subsection, upon receiving notice of default, the Commissioner, in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, may acquire the loan and any security therefor upon payment of the financial institution in cash or in debentures (as provided in the loan insurance contract) of a total amount equal to the unpaid principal balance of the loan, plus any accrued interest, any advances approved by the Commissioner made previously by the financial institution under the provisions of the loan instruments, and reimbursement for such collection costs, court costs, and attorney fees as may be approved by the Commissioner. If the insurance payment is made in cash, there shall be added to such payment an amount equivalent to the interest which the debentures would have earned, computed to a date to be established pursuant to regulations issued by the Commissioner.

(7) Debentures issued under this subsection shall be executed in the name of [the Section 220 Home Improvement Account] the General Insurance Fund as obligor, shall be signed by the Commissioner, by either his written or engraved signature, shall be negotiable, and shall be dated as of the date the loan is assigned to the Commissioner and shall bear interest from that date. They shall bear interest at a rate established by the Commissioner pursuant to section 224, payable semiannually on the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July of each year and shall mature ten years after their date of issuance. They shall be exempt from taxation as provided in section 207(i) with respect to debentures issued under that section. They shall be paid out of [the Section 220 Home Improvement Account] the General Insurance Fund which shall be primarily liable therefor and they shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, and the guaranty shall be expressed on the face of the debentures. In the event [the Section 220 Home Improvement Account] the General Insurance Fund fails to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of or interest on any debentures so guaranteed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holders the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon, to the extent of the amount so paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such debentures. Debentures issued under this subsection shall be in such form and denominations in multiples of $50, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall include such provisions for redemption, if any, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and they may be in coupon or registered form. Any difference between the amount of the debentures to which the financial institution is entitled, and the aggregate face value of the debentures issued, not to exceed $50, shall be adjusted by the payment of cash by the Commissioner to the financial institution from [the Section 220 Home Improvement Account] the General Insurance Fund.

(iii) not exceed (in the case of a property or project approved for mortgage insurance prior to the beginning of construction) 90 per centum of the amount which the Commissioner estimates will be the replacement cost of the property or project when the proposed improvements are completed (the replacement cost may include the land, the proposed physical improvements, utilities within the boundaries of the land, architect's fees, taxes, interest during construction, and other miscellaneous charges incident to construction and approved by the Commissioner, and shall include an allowance for builder's and sponsor's profit and risk of 10 per centum of all of the foregoing items, except the land, unless the Commissioner, after certification that such

TITLE III—FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

PURPOSES

SEC. 301. The Congress hereby declares that the purposes of this title are to establish in the Federal Government a secondary market facility for home mortgages, to provide that the operations of such facility shall be financed by private capital to the maximum extent feasible, and to authorize such facility to—

(a) provide supplementary assistance to the secondary market for home mortgages by providing a degree of liquidity for mortgage investments, thereby improving the distribution of investment capital available for home mortgage financing;

(b) provide special assistance (when, and to the extent that, the President has determined that it is in the public interest) for the financing of (1) selected types of home mortgages (pending the establishment of their marketability) originated under special housing programs designed to provide housing of acceptable standards at full economic costs for segments of the national population which are unable to obtain adequate housing under established home financing programs, and (2) home mortgages generally as a means of retarding or stopping a decline in mortgage lending and home building activities which threatens materially the stability of a high level national economy; and

(c) manage and liquidate the existing mortgage portfolio of the Federal National Mortgage Association in an orderly manner, with a minimum of adverse effect upon the home mortgage market and minimum loss to the Federal Government.

CREATION OF ASSOCIATION

SEC. 302. (a) There is hereby created a body corporate to be known as the "Federal National Mortgage Association" (hereinafter referred to as the "Association"), which shall be a constituent agency of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. The Association shall have succession until dissolved by Act of Congress. It shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia and shall be deemed, for purposes of venue in civil actions, to be a resident thereof. Agencies or offices may be established by the Association in such other place or places as it may deem necessary or appropriate in the conduct of its business.

(b) For the purposes set forth in section 301 and subject to the limitations and restrictions of this title, the Association is authorized, pursuant to commitments or otherwise, to purchase, lend (under section 304) on the security of, service, sell, or otherwise deal in any mortgages which are insured under the National Housing Act or title V of the Housing Act of 1949, or which are insured or guaranteed under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 or chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code: Provided, That (1) no mortgage may be purchased at a price exceeding 100 per centum of the unpaid principal amount thereof at the time of purchase, with adjustments for interest and any comparable items; (2) the Association may not purchase any mortgage, except a mortgage insured under title V of the Housing Act of 1949, if it is offered by, or covers property held by, a Federal, State, territorial, or municipal instrumentality; and (3) the Association may not purchase any mortgage under section 305, except a mortgage insured under section 220 or title VIII, or insured under section 213 and covering property located in an urban renewal area, or a mortgage covering property located in Alaska, Guam, or Hawaii, if the original principal obligation thereof exceeds or exceeded $17,500 for each family residence or dwelling unit covered by the mortgage (plus an additional $2,500 for each such family residence or dwelling unit which has four or more bedrooms). For the purposes of this title, [the term "mortgages"] the terms "mortgages" and "home mortgages" shall be inclusive of any mortgages or other loans insured under any of the provisions of the National Housing Act or title V of the Housing Act of 1949.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or of any other law, the Association is authorized under section 306 to create, accept, execute, and otherwise administer in all respects such trusts, receiverships, conservatorships, liquidating or other agencies, or other fiduciary and representative undertakings and activities as might be appropriate for financing purposes; and in relation thereto the Association may acquire, hold and manage, dispose of, and otherwise deal in any first mortgages in which the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof may have a financial interest. The Association may join in any such undertakings and activities notwithstanding that it is also serving in a fiduciary or representative capacity; and is authorized, consistent with section 307, to guarantee any participations or other instruments, whether evidence of property rights or debt, issued for such financing purposes. Any participations or other instruments so guaranteed shall to the same extent as securities issued or guaranteed by the United States or its instrumentalities be deemed to be exempt securities within the meaning of laws administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission. If there shall be included within one or more of the trusts or other agencies created pursuant to the authority of this subsection any mortgages bearing a below-market interest rate and insured under section 221(d)(3) after the date of the enactment of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, there are authorized to be appropriated from time to time such amounts as may be necessary to reimburse the Association for the amount of the differential (including interest, other costs, and a fair proportion of administrative expense) between (1) the total outlay with respect to outstanding participations or other instruments in an amount not to exceed the dollar amount of such below-market interest rate mortgages, and (2) the total receipts from such mortgages. The amounts of any mortgages acquired by the Association under section 306, pursuant to this subsection, shall not be included in the total amounts set forth in section 306(c).

CAPITALIZATION

SEC. 303. (a) The Association shall have nonvoting common stock; and initially shall also have nonvoting preferred stock to which the Secretary of the Treasury shall subscribe as provided in subsections (d) and (e) of this section. All stock of the Association shall have a par value of $100 per share, and shall not be transferable except on the books of the Association. At the option of the Association all such stock shall be retirable at par value at any time, except that retirements of common stock shall not be made if, as a consequence, the amount thereof remaining outstanding would be less than $100,000,000. With respect to the preferred stock held by him, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be entitled to cumulative dividends for each fiscal year or portion thereof, from the date or dates the capital represented by such preferred stock is initially utilized until such preferred stock is retired, at rates determined by him at the beginning of each such fiscal year, taking into consideration the current average interest rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the preceding fiscal year. The Secretary of the Treasury shall permit the retirement of the preferred stock held by him in the manner provided in this section. Funds of the capital surplus and the general surplus accounts of the Association shall be available to retire the preferred stock held by the Secretary of the Treasury as rapidly as the Association shall deem feasible. Concurrently with the retirement of the last of such outstanding shares of preferred stock, the Association shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury for covering into miscellaneous receipts an amount equal to that part of the general surplus and reserves of the Association (other than reserves established to provide for any depreciation in value of its assets, including mortgages) which shall be deemed to have been earned through the use of the capital represented by the shares held by him from time to time. The amount of such payment shall be determined by applying to such surplus and reserves that percentage which is equivalent to the proportion borne by the employed capital represented by the Secretary's stock to the total employed capital of the Association, computed monthly for the period from the cutoff date determined pursuant to section 303(d) of this title to the aforesaid retirement of the last of the outstanding shares of preferred stock of the Association.

(b) The Association shall accumulate funds for its capital surplus account from private and other sources by requiring each mortgage seller to make payments of nonrefundable capital contributions, equal to not more than 2 per centum nor less than 1 per centum of the unpaid principal amounts of mortgages purchased or to be purchased by the Association from such seller under section 304, as determined from time to time by the Association, taking into consideration conditions in the mortgage market and the general economy; and by requiring each borrower to make such payments, equal to not more than one-half of 1 per centum of the amount lent by the Association to such borrower under section 304. In addition, the Association may impose charges or fees for its services with the objective that all costs and expenses of its operations should be within its income derived from such operations and that such operations should be fully self-supporting. All earnings from the operations of the Association shall annually be transferred to its general surplus account. At any time, funds of the general surplus account may, in the discretion of the board of directors, be transferred to reserves. All dividends shall be charged against the general surplus account. This subsection (b) shall be subject to the exceptions set forth in section 307 of this title.

If payment is made in cash, it shall be in an amount equivalent to the face amount of the debentures that would otherwise be issued plus an amount equivalent to the interest which the debentures would have earned, computed to a date to be established pursuant to regulations issued by the Commissioner.

(b) The Commissioner is authorized to borrow from the Treasury from time to time such amounts as the Commissioner shall determine are necessary to make payments in cash (in lieu of issuing debentures guaranteed by the United States, as provided in this Act) pursuant to the provisions of this section. Notes or other obligations issued by the Commissioner in borrowing under this subsection shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. Each sum borrowed pursuant to this subsection shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities during the month preceding the issuance of such notes or other obligations.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS

SEC. 707. If in any operating year the net income of a project insured under this title is less than the aggregate of the minimum annual amortization charge and the insured annual return, the Commissioner, upon submission by the investor of a claim for the payment of the amount of the difference between such net income and the aggregate of the minimum annual amortization charge and the insured annual return and after proof of the validity of such claim, shall pay to the investor, in cash from [the Housing Investment Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund, the amount of such difference, as determined by the Commissioner, but not exceeding, in any event, an amount equal to the aggregate of the minimum annual amortization charge and the insured annual return. Nothing contained in this title or any other provision of law shall be construed as preventing or restricting an investor from assigning, pledging, or otherwise transferring or disposing of, subject to rules and regulations of the Commissioner, any or all rights, claims, or other benefits under any insurance contract made pursuant to this title to an assignee, pledgee, or other transferee, including the holders (or the trustee for such holders) of any debentures issued by the investor in connection with the project to which such insurance contract relates, and the Commissioner is authorized to pay claims or issue debentures in accordance with the provisions of this section and section 708 of this title to any such assignee, pledgee, or other transferee.

DEBENTURES

In any such case the investor shall be obligated to convey to said Commissioner title to the project which meets the requirements of the rules and regulations of the Commissioner in force at the time the insurance contract was executed and which is evidenced in the manner prescribed by such rules and regulations, and, in the event that the investor fails so to do, said Commissioner may, at his option, terminate the insurance contract.

(b) If in any operating year the aggregate of the differences between the operating expenses (exclusive of any premium charges previously waived hereunder) and the gross income for the preceding operating years, less the aggregate of any deficits in such operating expenses reimbursed from excess earnings as hereinbefore provided, shall at any time equal or exceed 5 per centum of the established investment, the investor shall thereafter have the right, after written notice to the Com-

(c) Any difference, not exceeding $50, between 90 per centum of the outstanding investment for the operating year in which a project is acquired by the Commissioner pursuant to this section and the total face value of the debentures to be issued and delivered to the investor pursuant to this section shall be adjusted by the payment of cash by the Commissioner to the investor from [the Housing Investment Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund.

(d) Upon the acquisition of a project by the Commissioner pursuant to this section, the insurance contract shall terminate.

(e) Debentures issued under this title to any investor shall be executed in the name of [the Housing Investment Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund as obligor, shall be signed by the Commissioner, by either his written or engraved signature, and shall be negotiable. Such debentures shall be dated as of the first day of the operating year in which the project for which such debentures were issued was acquired by the Commissioner, shall bear interest at a rate to be determined by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, at the time the insurance contract was executed, but not to exceed $2\frac{3}{4}$ per centum per annum, payable semiannually on the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July of each year, and shall mature on the 1st day of July in such calendar year or years, not later than the fortieth following the date of the issuance thereof, as shall be determined by the Commissioner and stated on the face of such debentures.

(f) Such debentures shall be in such form and in such denominations in multiples of $50, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and may include such provisions for redemption as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and may be issued in either coupon or registered form.

In the event that [the Housing Investment Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund fails to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of or the interest on any debentures so guaranteed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holders the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon, to the extent of the amount so paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such debentures.

(h) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law relating to the acquisition, handling, or disposal of real and other property by the United States, the Commissioner shall have power, for the protection of [the Housing Investment Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund, to pay out of said Fund all expenses or charges in connection with, and to deal with, complete, reconstruct, rent, renovate, modernize, insure, make contracts for the management of, or establish suitable agencies for the management of, or sell for cash or credit or lease in his discretion, in whole or in part, any project acquired pursuant to this title; and, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the Commissioner shall also have power to pursue to final collection by way of compromise or otherwise all claims acquired by, or assigned or transferred to, him in connection with the acquisition or disposal of any project pursuant to this title: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not be construed to apply to any contract for hazard insurance, or to any purchase or contract for services or supplies on account of any project acquired pursuant to this title if the amount of such purchase or contract does not exceed $1,000.

SEC. 803. (a) In order to assist in relieving the acute shortage and urgent need for family housing which now exists at or in areas adjacent to military installations because of uncertainty as to the permanency of such installations and to increase the supply of necessary family housing accommodations for personnel at such installations, the Commissioner is authorized, upon application of the mortgagee to insure mortgages (including advances on such mortgages during construction) which are eligible for insurance as hereinafter provided, and, upon such terms as the Commissioner may prescribe, to make commitments for so insuring such mortgages prior to the date of their execution or disbursement thereon; Provided, That the aggregate amount of principal obligations of all mortgages insured under this title (except mortgages insured pursuant to the provisions of this title in effect prior to the enactment of the Housing Amendments of 1955) shall not exceed $2,300,000,000: And provided further, That the limitation in section 217 of this Act shall not apply to this title: And provided further, That no more mortgages shall be insured under this section after October 1, 1962, except pursuant to a commitment to insure before such date, and not more than twenty-eight thousand family housing units shall be contracted for after June 30, 1959, pursuant to any mortgage insured under this section after such date.

The Commissioner may make such contracts with, and acquire for not to exceed $100 stock or interest in, any such mortgagor, as the Commissioner may deem necessary to render effective such restriction or regulation. The housing accommodations shall comply with such standards and conditions as the Commissioner may prescribe to establish the acceptability of such property for mortgage insurance, except that the certification of the Secretary of Defense or his designee shall (for purposes of mortgage insurance under this title) be conclusive evidence to the Commissioner of the existence of the need for such housing. However, if the Commissioner does not concur in the housing needs as certified by the Secretary, the Commissioner may require the Secretary to guarantee [the Armed Services Housing Mortgage Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund against loss with respect to the mortgage covering such housing. The Commissioner shall report to the Committees on Banking and Currency of the Senate and the House of Representatives each instance in which he has required the Secretary to guarantee [the Armed Services Housing Mortgage Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund, with reasons therefor. Such certificate shall be conclusive evidence to the Commissioner of the employment status of the mortgagor and of the mortgagor's need for housing.

(b) No mortgage shall be insured under this section unless the Secretary or his designee shall have certified to the Commissioner that the housing is necessary to provide adequate housing for such civilians employed in connection with such a research or development installation and that there is no present intention to substantially curtail the number of such civilian personnel assigned or to be assigned to such installation. Such certification shall be conclusive evidence to the Commissioner of the need for such housing but if the Commissioner determines that insurance of mortgages on such housing is not an acceptable risk, he may require the Secretary to guarantee [the Armed Services Housing Mortgage Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund from loss with respect to mortgages insured pursuant to this section. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to provide for payment to meet losses arising from such guaranty.

(c) The Commissioner may accept any mortgage for insurance under this section without regard to any requirement in any other section of this Act, that the project or property be economically sound or an acceptable risk.

(d) Any mortgagee under a mortgage insured under this section is entitled to the benefits of insurance as provided in section 204(a) with respect to mortgages insured under section 203.

TITLE IX—NATIONAL DEFENSE HOUSING INSURANCE

SEC. 901. As used in this title, the terms "mortgage", "first mortgage", "mortgagee", "mortgagor", "maturity date", and "State" shall have the same meaning as in section 201 of this Act.

[SEC. 902. There is hereby created a National Defense Housing Insurance Fund which shall be used by the Commissioner as a revolving fund for carrying out the provisions of this title, and mortgages insured under this title shall be known and referred to as "national defense housing insured mortgages". The Commissioner is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to such fund the sum of $10,000,000 from the War Housing Insurance Fund established pursuant to the provisions of section 602 of this Act. General expenses of operation of the Federal Housing Administration under this title may be charged to the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund: Provided, That no moneys in said fund shall be expended for administrative expenses of the Federal Housing Administration under this title except pursuant to such specific authorization therefor as may hereafter be enacted by the Congress.】

SEC. 903. (a) This title is designed to supplement systems of mortgage insurance under other provisions of the National Housing Act in order to assist in providing adequate housing in areas which the President, pursuant to section 101 of the Defense Housing and Community Facilities and Services Act of 1951, shall have determined to be critical defense housing areas. The Commissioner is authorized, upon application by the mortgagee, to insure under this section or section 908 as hereinafter provided any mortgage which is eligible for insurance as hereinafter provided and upon such terms as the Commissioner may prescribe to make commitments for the insuring of such mortgages prior to the date of their execution or disbursement thereon: Provided, That the property covered by the mortgage is in an area which the President, pursuant to section 101 of the Defense Housing and Community Facilities and Services Act of 1951, shall have determined to be a critical defense housing area, and that the total number of dwelling units in properties covered by mortgages insured under this title in any such area does not exceed the number authorized by the Housing and Home Finance Administrator from time to time as needed in such area for defense purposes and to be insured pursuant to this title: Provided further, That in the event the Commissioner has issued a commitment to insure a mortgage under section 903 of this title, which commitment was in force and effect on June 1, 1953, and the Commissioner determines that, because of changes in defense requirements, there is reasonable doubt that such housing is needed for defense purposes and that it is probable that the mortgage would become immediately in default and claim made for payment under the mortgage insurance contract if the unit or units are completed and the mortgage insured, the Commissioner is authorized, in the interest of conserving [the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund, to pay (in cash from [the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund) to the mortgagee for the account of the mortgagor such amount as the Commissioner shall determine to be necessary to reimburse the mortgagor the amounts paid or to be paid by the mortgagor on account of labor performed and materials in place, less the Commissioner's estimate of the reasonable salvage value of such materials, plus an allowance for development costs equal to 4 per centum of the principal amount of the mortgage specified in such commitment, and no payments shall be made pursuant to this proviso unless a claim therefor is filed not later than six months from date of the determination of lack of need and the claim is in such form and contains such supporting information, documents, and data as the Commissioner may require: Provided further, That the aggregate amount of principal obligations of all mortgages insured under this title shall not exceed such sum as may be authorized by the President from time to time for the purposes of this title pursuant to his authority under section 217 hereof: Provided further, That the Commissioner shall have power to require properties covered by mortgages insured under this title to be held for rental for such periods of time and at such rentals or other charges as he may prescribe; and, with respect to such properties being held for rental, (1) to require that the property be held by a mortgagor approved by him, and (2) to prescribe such requirements as he deems to be reasonable governing the method of operation and prohibiting or restricting sales of such properties or interests therein or agreements relating to such sales: Provided further, That the Commissioner shall require each dwelling covered by a mortgage insured under this section, for which a commitment to insure is issued after the effective date of the Housing Act of 1954, to be held for rental for a period of not less than three years after the dwelling is made available for initial occupancy: And provided further, That no mortgage shall be insured under this title unless the mortgagor certifies under oath that in selecting tenants for any property covered by the mortgage he will not discriminate against any family by reason of the fact that there are children in the family, and that he will not sell the property while the insurance is in effect unless the purchaser so certifies, such certification to be filed with the Commissioner. Violation of any such certification shall be a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not to exceed $500.

Any difference between the amount of debentures to which the mortgagee is entitled under this section or section 908 of this Act and the aggregate face value of the debentures issued, not to exceed $350, shall be adjusted by the payment of cash by the Commissioner to the mortgagee from [the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund.

All such debentures shall be dated as of the date foreclosure proceedings were instituted, or the property was otherwise acquired by the mortgagee after default, except that debentures issued pursuant to claims for insurance filed on or after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964 shall be dated as of the date of default or as of such later date as the Commissioner, in his discretion, may establish by regulation. The debentures shall bear interest from such date at a rate determined by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, at the time the mortgage was accepted for insurance, but not to exceed 3 per centum per annum, payable semiannually on the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July of each year. Such debentures shall mature twenty years after the date thereof. Such debentures shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, or gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by any Territory, dependency, or possession of the United States, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, and shall be paid out of [the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund, which shall be primarily liable therefor, and they shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face of the debentures. In the event that [the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund] the General Insurance Fund fails to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of or interest on any debentures issued under this title, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holders the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amounts so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such debentures.

(e) The certificate of claim issued by the Commissioner to any mortgagee under this section shall be for an amount determined in accordance with, and shall contain provisions and shall be paid in accordance with, the provisions of section 204(e) and section 204(f) of this Act [which are applicable to mortgages insured under section 207, except that the reference in section 204(f) to "the Housing Insurance Fund" shall be deemed for the purposes of this section to be a reference to the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund].

* * * * *

(a) Moneys in the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund not needed for the current operations of the Federal Housing Administration under this title shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund, or invested in bonds or other obligations of, or in bonds or other obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States. The Commissioner may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, purchase in the open market debentures issued under the provisions of this title. Such purchases shall be made at a price which will provide an investment yield of not less than the yield obtainable from other investments authorized by this section. Debentures so purchased shall be canceled and not reissued.

【(b) Premium charges, adjusted premium charges, and appraisal and other fees, received on account of the insurance of any mortgage insured under this title, the receipts derived from any such mortgage or claim assigned to the Commissioner and from any property acquired by the Commissioner, and all earnings on the assets of the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund, shall be credited to the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund. The principal of and interest paid and to be paid on debentures issued in exchange for any mortgage or property insured under this title, cash adjustments, and expenses incurred in the handling of such mortgages or property and in the foreclosure and collection of mortgages and claims assigned to the Commissioner under this title, shall be charged to the National Defense Housing Insurance Fund.】

(7) In recognition that there should be local determination of the need for low-rent housing to meet needs not being adequately met by private enterprise—

(a) * * *

(b) the Authority shall not make any contract for loans (other than preliminary loans) or for annual contributions pursuant to this Act with respect to any low-rent housing project initiated after March 1, 1949, (i) unless the governing body of the locality involved has entered into an agreement with the public housing agency providing for the local cooperation required by the Authority pursuant to this Act; [(ii) unless the public housing agency has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Authority that a gap of at least 20 per centum (except in the case of a displaced family or an elderly family) has been left between the upper rental limits for admission to the proposed low-rent housing and the lowest rents at which private enterprise unaided by public subsidy is providing (through new construction and available existing structures) a substantial supply of decent, safe, and sanitary housing toward meeting the need of an adequate volume thereof; and (iii)] and (ii) unless the public housing agency has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Authority that there is a feasible method for the temporary relocation of the individuals and families displaced from the project site, and that there are or are being provided, in the project area or in other areas not generally less desirable in regard to public utilities and public and commercial facilities and at rents or prices within the financial means of such individuals and families, decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings equal in number to the number of and available to such individuals and families and reasonably accessible to their places of employment.

(8) The Authority may authorize the cost of relocation payments made by public housing agencies to be included with the development or acquisition cost of any project for purposes of determining the amount of loans and annual contributions authorized to be made with respect to such project under sections 9 and 10, but such costs shall be separately stated as relocation costs. For purposes of this paragraph, a "relocation payment" is a payment (i) which is made to an individual, family, business concern, or nonprofit organization displaced on or after January 27, 1964, from a low-rent housing project site as a result of the acquisition of real property by a public housing agency, (ii) which is not otherwise authorized under any Federal law, and (iii) which is made only on such terms and conditions, and subject to such limitations, as are authorized (as of the time such payment is approved) under [section 114 (b) or (c)] section 114 (b), (c), and (d) of the Housing Act of 1949 for relocation payments made to individuals, families, business concerns, or nonprofit organizations, as the case may be.

LOW-RENT HOUSING IN PRIVATE ACCOMMODATIONS

SEC. 23. (a) For the purpose of providing a supplementary form of low-rent housing which will aid in assuring a decent place to live for every citizen and promote efficiency and economy in the program under this Act by taking full advantage of vacancies or potential vacancies in the private housing market, each public housing agency shall, to the maximum extent consistent with the achievement of the objectives of this Act, provide low-rent housing under this Act in the form of low-rent housing in private accommodations in accordance with this section where such housing in private accommodations can be provided at a cost equal to or less than housing in projects assisted under other provisions of this Act. As used in this section the term "low-rent housing in private accommodations" means dwelling units in an existing structure, leased from a private owner which provide decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations and related facilities effectively supplementing the accommodations and facilities in low-rent housing assisted under the other provisions of this Act in a manner calculated to meet the total housing needs of the community in which they are located. As used in this section, the term "owner" means any person or entity having the legal right to lease or sublease property containing one or more dwelling units as described in this section.

(b) Beginning as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this section, each public housing agency shall conduct a continuing survey and listing of the available dwelling units within the community or communities under its jurisdiction which provide decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations and related facilities and are, or may be made, suitable for use as low-rent housing in private accommodations under this section.

(c) Each public housing agency, by notification to the owners of housing listed under subsection (b), or by publication or advertisement, or otherwise, shall from time to time make known to the public in the community or communities under its jurisdiction the anticipated need for dwelling units in such community or communities to be used as low-rent housing in private accommodations under this section, inviting the owners of such dwelling units to make available for purposes of this section one or more of such units (not exceeding 10 per centum of the units in any single structure except to the extent that the agency, because of the limited number units in the structure or for any other reason, determines that such limit should not be applied). The public housing agency shall conduct appropriate inspections of the units offered to be made available in any residential structure by the owner thereof in response to such invitation, and if—

(1) it finds that such units are, or may be made, suitable for use as low-rent housing in private accommodations within the meaning of subsection (a), and

(2) the rentals to be charged for such units, as negotiated and agreed to by the agency and the owner of the structure in a manner consistent with subsection (d)(2), are within the financial range of families of low income, such agency may approve such units for use as low-rent housing in private accommodations in accordance with (and subject to the applicable limitations contained in) this section. Each public housing agency shall maintain and keep current a list of units approved by it under this subsection, including such information with respect to each such unit as it may consider necessary or appropriate.

(d) To the extent of contracts for annual contributions entered into by the Authority with a public housing agency under section 10(e), such agency may enter into contracts with the owners of structures containing dwelling units approved under subsection (c) for the use of such units in accordance with this section. Each such contract with an owner shall provide (with respect to any unit) that—

(1) the selection of tenants for such unit shall be the function of the owner, subject to the provisions of the contract between the Authority and the agency;

(2) the rental and other charges to be received by the owner shall be negotiated and agreed to by the agency and the owner, and the rental and other charges to be paid by the tenant shall be determined in accordance with the standards applicable to units in low-rent housing projects assisted under the other provisions of this Act;

(3) the agency shall have the sole right to give notice to vacate, with the owner having the right to make representations to the agency for termination of a tenancy;

(4) maintenance and replacements (including redecoration) shall be in accordance with the standard practice for the building concerned, as established by the owner and agreed to by the agency; and

(5) the agency and the owner shall carry out such other appropriate terms and conditions as may be mutually agreed to by them.

Each contract between a public housing agency and an owner entered into under this subsection shall be for a term of not less than twelve months nor more than thirty-six months, and shall be renewable by such agency and owner at the expiration of such term.

(e) The annual contribution under this Act for a project of a public housing agency for low-rent housing in private accommodations under this section in lieu of any other guaranteed contribution authorized by section 10 shall not exceed the amount of the fixed annual contribution which would be established under this Act for a newly constructed project by such public housing agency designed to accomodate the comparable number, sizes, and kinds of families. The period over which payments will be made to a public housing agency for a project of low-rent housing in private accomodations under this section, and the aggregate amount of such payments, under a contract for annual contributions, shall be determined on the basis of the number of units in the community or communities under the jurisdiction of such agency which are in use (or can reasonably be expected to be placed in use) as low-rent housing in private accomodations under this section, taking into account the terms of the leases under which such units are (or will be) so used. In addition, contracts for financial assistance entered into by the Authority with a public housing agency pursuant to this section shall provide for reimbursement of reasonable and necessary expenses incurred by such agency in conducting surveys, listings, and inspections described in subsections (b) and (c).

(f) On or before January 1, 1968, the Authority shall submit to the Congress a full report of operations under this section, together with its recommendations with respect thereto.

PENALTIES

SEC. [23] 24. All general penal statutes relating to the larceny, embezzlement, or conversion or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys or property of the United States shall apply to the moneys and property of the Authority and to moneys and properties of the United States entrusted to the Authority.

(c) No contract shall be entered into for any loan or capital grant under this title, or for annual contributions or capital grants pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, for any project or projects not constructed or covered by a contract for annual contributions prior to August 1, 1956, and no mortgage shall be insured, and no commitment to insure a mortgage shall be issued, under section 220 or section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act, as amended, unless (1) there is presented to the Administrator by the locality a workable program for community improvement (which shall include an official plan of action, as it exists from time to time, for effectively dealing with the problem of urban slums and blight within the community and for the establishment and preservation of a well-planned community with well-organized residential neighborhoods of decent homes and suitable living environment for adequate family life) for utilizing appropriate private and public resources to eliminate, and prevent the development or spread of, slums and urban blight, to encourage needed urban rehabilitation, to provide for the redevelopment of blighted, deteriorated, or slum areas, or to undertake such of the aforesaid activities or other feasible community activities as may be suitably employed to achieve the objectives of such a program, and (2) on the basis of his review of such program, the Administrator determines that such program meets the requirements of this subsection and certifies to the constituent agencies affected that the Federal assistance may be made available in such community: Provided, That this sentence shall not apply to the insurance of, or commitment to insure, a mortgage under (i) section 220 of the National Housing Act, as amended, if the mortgaged property is in an area referred to in clause (A)(i) of paragraph (1) of section 220(d) of the National Housing Act, or (ii) section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act if payments with respect to the mortgaged property are made or are to be made under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, except that no such mortgage shall be insured, and no commitment to insure such a mortgage shall be issued, with respect to property in any community for which a workable program for community improvement was required and in effect at the time a contract for a loan or capital grant was entered into under this title, or a contract for annual contributions or capital grants was entered into pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937, unless there is a workable program for community improvement which meets the requirements of this subsection in effect in such community at the time of such insurance or commitment: And provided further, That, notwithstanding any other provisions of law which would authorize such delegation or transfer, there shall not be delegated or transferred to any other official (except an officer or employee of the Housing and Home Finance Agency serving as Acting Administrator during the absence or disability of the Administrator or in the event of a vacancy in that office) the final authority vested in the Administrator (i) to determine whether any such workable program meets the requirements of this subsection, (ii) to make the certification that Federal assistance of the types enumerated in this subsection may be made available in such community, or (iii) to determine that the relocation requirements of section 105(c) of this title have been met: Provided further, That commencing three years after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964, no workable program shall be certified or re-certified unless (A) the locality has had in effect, for at least six months prior to such certification or re-certification, a minimum standards housing code, related but not limited to health, sanitation, and occupancy requirements, which is deemed adequate by the Administrator, and (B) the Administrator is satisfied that the locality is carrying out an effective program of enforcement to achieve compliance with such housing code.

* * * * *

(e) No loan or grant contract may be entered into by the Administrator for an urban renewal project unless he determines that (A) the workable program for community improvement presented by the locality pursuant to subsection (c) is of sufficient scope and content to furnish a basis for evaluation of the need for the urban renewal project; and (B) such project is in accord with the program.

LOANS

* * * * *

(d) The Administrator may make advances of funds to local public agencies for surveys of urban areas to determine whether the under-

The contract for any such advance of funds shall be made upon the condition that such advance of funds shall be repaid, with interest at not less than the applicable going Federal rate, out of any moneys which become available to the local public agency for the undertaking of the project involved. No contract for any such advances of funds for surveys and plans for urban renewal projects which may be assisted under this title shall be made unless the governing body of the locality involved has by resolution or ordinance approved the undertaking of such surveys and plans and the submission by the local public agency of an application for such advance of funds. Notwithstanding section 110(h) or the use in any other provision of this title of the term "local public agency" or "local public agencies" the Administrator may make advances of funds under this subsection for surveys and plans for an urban renewal project (including General Neighborhood Renewal Plans as hereinafter defined) to a single local public body which has the authority to undertake and carry out a substantial portion, as determined by the Administrator, of the surveys and plans or the project respecting which such surveys and plans are to be made: Provided, That the application for such advances shows, to the satisfaction of the Administrator, that the filing thereof has been approved by the public body or bodies authorized to undertake the other portions of the surveys and plans or of the project which the applicant is not authorized to undertake.

[In order to facilitate proper preliminary planning for the attainment of the urban renewal objectives of this title, the Administrator may also make advances of funds (in addition to those authorized above) to local public agencies for the preparation of General Neighborhood Renewal Plans (as herein defined) for urban renewal areas of such scope that the urban renewal activities therein may have to be carried out in stages, consistent with the capacity and resources of the respective local public agency, over an estimated period of not more than ten years.] In order to facilitate proper preliminary planning for the attainment of the urban renewal objectives of this title, the Administrator may also make advances of funds (in addition to those authorized above) to local public agencies for the preparation of General Neighborhood Renewal Plans (as herein defined). A General Neighborhood Renewal Plan may be prepared for an area which consists of an urban renewal area or areas together with any adjoining areas, and which is of such size that the urban renewal activities in the urban renewal area or areas may have to be carried out in stages, consistent with the capacity and resources of the respective local public agency or agencies, over an estimated period of not more than ten years. No contract for advances for the prepara- tion of a General Neighborhood Renewal Plan may be made unless the Administrator has determined that:

【(1) in the interest of sound community planning, it is desirable that the urban renewal area be planned for urban renewal purposes in its entirety;】

(1) in the interest of sound community planning, it is desirable that the urban renewal activities proposed for the area be planned in their entirety;

(2) the local public agency proposes to undertake promptly an urban renewal project embracing at least 10 per centum of such area, upon completion of the General Neighborhood Renewal Plan and the preparation of an urban renewal plan for such project; and

(3) the governing body of the locality has by resolution or ordinance (i) approved the undertaking of the General Neighborhood Renewal Plan and the submission of an application for such advance and (ii) represented that such plan will be used to the fullest extent feasible as a guide for the provision of public improvements in such area and that the plan will be considered in formulating codes and other regulatory measures affecting property in the area and in undertaking other local governmental activities pertaining to the development, redevelopment, rehabilitation, and conservation of the area.

The contract for any such advance of funds for a General Neighborhood Renewal Plan shall be made upon the condition that such advance shall be repaid, with interest at not less than the applicable going Federal rate, out of any moneys which become available to the local public agency for the undertaking of the first urban renewal project in such area: Provided, That in the event of the undertaking of any other project or projects in such area an appropriate allocation of the amount of the advance, with interest, may be effected to the end that each such project may bear its proper allocable part, as determined by the Administrator, of the cost of the General Neighborhood Renewal Plan. As used herein, a General Neighborhood Renewal Plan means a preliminary plan (conforming, in the determination of the governing body of the locality, to the general plan of the locality as a whole and to the workable program of the community meeting the requirements of section 101) which outlines the urban renewal activities proposed for the area involved, provides a framework for the preparation of urban renewal plans and indicates generally, to the extent feasible in preliminary planning, the land uses, population density, building coverage, prospective requirements for rehabilitation and improvement of property, and any portions of the area contemplated for clearance and redevelopment.

Such grants shall not be used for major long-term capital improvement; shall not exceed two-thirds of the cost, as determined or estimated by the Administrator, of the project for which the grant is made; and shall be subject to such other terms and conditions as he may prescribe. The Administrator is authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to make advance or progress payments on account of any grant contracted to be made pursuant to this section. * * * * *

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 110. The following terms shall have the meanings, respectively, ascribed to them below, and, unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, shall include the plural as well as the singular number:

* * * * *

(c) "Urban renewal project" or "project" may include undertakings and activities of a local public agency in an urban renewal area for the elimination and for the prevention of the development or spread of slums and blight, and may involve slum clearance and redevelopment in an urban renewal area, or rehabilitation or conservation in an urban renewal area, or a program of code enforcement in an urban renewal area, or any combination or part thereof, in accordance with such urban renewal plan. Such undertakings and activities may include—

(1) acquisition of (i) a slum area or a deteriorated or deteriorating area, or (ii) land which is predominantly open and which because of obsolete platting, diversity of ownership, deterioration of structures or of site improvements, or otherwise, substantially impairs or arrests the sound growth of the community, or (iii) open land necessary for sound community growth which is to be developed for predominantly residential uses, or (iv) air rights in an area consisting principally of land in highways, railway or subway tracks, bridge or tunnel entrances, or other similar facilities which have a blighting influence on the surrounding area and over which air rights sites are to be developed for the elimination of such blighting influences and for the provision of housing (and related facilities and uses) designed specifically for, and limited to, families and individuals of low or moderate income: Provided, That the requirement in paragraph (a) of this section that the area be a slum area or a blighted, deteriorated or deteriorating area shall not be applicable in the case of projects under clauses (iii) and (iv) hereof: Provided further, That the aggregate amount of capital grants for projects under clause (iv) shall not exceed 5 per centum of the aggregate amount of grants authorized by this title to be contracted for after the date of enactment of the Housing Act of 1964;

(2) demolition and removal of buildings and improvements;

(3) installation, construction, or reconstruction of streets, utilities, parks, playgrounds, and other improvements necessary for carrying out in the urban renewal area the urban renewal objectives of this title in accordance with the urban renewal plan;

(4) disposition of any property acquired in the urban renewal area (including sale, leasing or retention by the local public agency itself) at its fair value for uses in accordance with the urban renewal plan or as provided in section 107;

(5) carrying out plans for programs of code enforcement or voluntary repair and rehabilitation of buildings or other improvements in accordance with the urban renewal plan: Provided, That no program of code enforcement shall be included as part of an urban renewal project unless the locality shall agree to increase its total expenditures with respect to code enforcement, during the period such project is under contract for a loan or capital grant, by an amount equal to the required local grants-in-aid with respect to the code enforcement included as part of such project;

(6) acquisition of any other real property in the urban renewal area where necessary to eliminate unhealthful, insanitary or unsafe conditions, lessen density, eliminate obsolete or other uses detrimental to the public welfare, or otherwise to remove or prevent the spread of blight or deterioration, or to provide land for needed public facilities;

(7) construction of foundations and platforms necessary for the provision on air rights sites of housing (and related facilities and uses) designed specifically for, and limited to, families and individuals of low or moderate income; and

(8) acquisition and repair or rehabilitation for guidance purposes, and resale by the local public agency, of structures which are located in the urban renewal area and which, under the urban renewal plan, are to be repaired or rehabilitated for dwelling use or related facilities: Provided, That the local public agency shall not acquire for such purposes, in any urban renewal area, structures which contain or will contain more than (A) one hundred dwelling units, or (B) 5 per centum of the total number of dwelling units in such area which, under the urban renewal plan, are to be repaired or rehabilitated, whichever is the lesser.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, (A) no contract shall be entered into for any loan or capital grant under this title for any project which provides for demolition and removal of buildings and improvements unless the Administrator determines that the objectives of the urban renewal plan could not be achieved through rehabilitation of the project area, and (B) not less than 10 per centum of the aggregate amount of (i) grants authorized to be contracted for under this title by the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 and subsequent Acts, and (ii) loans authorized to be made under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964, shall be available for projects assisted with such grants or loans which involve primarily code enforcement and rehabilitation.

* * * * *

(d) "Local grants-in-aid" shall mean assistance by a State, municipality, or other public body, or (in the case of cash grants or donations of land or other real property) any other entity, in connection with any project on which a contract for capital grant has been made under this title, in the form of (1) cash grants to defray expenditures within the purview of section 110(e)(1) hereof; (2) donations, at cash value, of land or other real property (exclusive of land in streets, alleys, and other public rights-of-way which may be vacated in connection with the project, or of air rights over streets, alleys, and other public rights-of-way) in the urban renewal area, and demolition, removal, or other work or improvements in the urban renewal area, at the cost thereof, of the types described in clause (2) and clause (3) of the second sentence of section 110(c); and (3) the provision, at their cost, of public buildings or other public facilities (other than publicly owned housing [and], revenue producing public utilities the capital cost of which is wholly financed with local bonds or obligations payable solely out of revenues derived from service charges, and publicly owned parking facilities to the extent that the cost thereof is anticipated to be recovered from revenues) which are necessary for carrying out in the area the urban renewal objectives of this title in accordance with the urban renewal plan: Provided, That in any case where, in the determination of the Administrator, any park, playground, public building, or other public facility is of direct benefit both to the urban renewal area and to other areas, and the approximate degree of the benefit to such other areas is estimated by the Administrator at 20 per centum or more of the total benefits, the Administrator shall provide that, for the purpose of computing the amount of the local grants-

in-aid for the project, there shall be included only such portion of the cost of such facility as the administrator estimates to be proportionate to the approximate degree of the benefit of such facility to the urban renewal area: And provided further, That for the purpose of computing the amount of local grants-in-aid under this section 110(d) with respect to any project covered by a Federal-aid contract under this title, the estimated cost (as determined by the Administrator) of parks, playgrounds, public buildings, or other public facilities may be deemed to be the actual cost thereof if (i) the construction or provision thereof is not completed at the time of final disposition of land in the project to be acquired and disposed of under the urban renewal plan, and (ii) the Administrator has received assurance satisfactory to him that such park, playground, public building, or other public facility will be constructed or completed when needed and within a time prescribed by him: And provided further, That in any case where a public facility furnished as a local grant-in-aid is financed in whole or in part by special assessments against real property in the project area acquired by the local public agency as part of the project, an amount equal to the total special assessments against such real property (or, in the case of a computation pursuant to the proviso immediately preceding, the estimated amount of such total special assessments) shall be deducted from the cost of such facility for the purpose of computing the amount of the local grants-in-aid for the project. With respect to any demolition or removal work, improvement or facility for which a State, municipality, or other public body has received or has contracted to receive any grant or subsidy from the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, the portion of the cost thereof defrayed or estimated by the Administrator to be defrayed with such subsidy or grant shall not be eligible for inclusion as a local grant-in-aid.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, no donation or provision of a public improvement or public facility of a type falling within the purview of this subsection shall be deemed to be ineligible as a local grant-in-aid for any project solely on the basis that the construction of such improvement or facility was commenced without notification to the Administrator or prior to Federal recognition of such project, if such construction was commenced not more than three years prior to the authorization by the Administrator of a contract for loan or capital grant for the project.

renewal plan (or of acquisition of real property under the third sentence of section 102(a)), (B) is displaced on or after January 27, 1964, and (C) is not part of an enterprise having establishments outside the urban renewal area.

Notwithstanding the provisions of clause (1) of the preceding sentence, a business concern which is not being displaced from an urban renewal area shall be eligible for payments under such clause (1) of its certified actual moving expenses with respect to its outdoor advertising displays being removed from the urban renewal area in the same manner as though such business concern were being displaced.

* * * * *

(c)(1) A local public agency may pay to any displaced individual or family his or its reasonable and necessary moving expenses and any actual direct losses of property (which are incurred on and after August 7, 1956, and for which reimbursement or compensation is not otherwise made): Provided, That such payment shall not exceed $200: And provided further, That the Administrator may authorize payment to individuals and families of fixed amounts (not to exceed $200 in any case) in lieu of their respective reasonable and necessary moving expenses and actual direct losses of property.

(2) A local public agency may pay (in addition to any amount under paragraph (1)), on behalf of any displaced family or any displaced individual sixty-two years of age or over, during the first five months after displacement, a relocation adjustment payment, not to exceed $500, to assist such displaced individual or family to acquire a decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling. The relocation adjustment payment shall be an amount which, when added to 20 per centum of the annual income of the displaced individual or family at the time of displacement, equals the average rental required, for a 12-month period, for such a decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling of modest standards adequate in size to accommodate the displaced individual or family (in the urban renewal area or in other areas not generally less desirable in regard to public utilities and public and commercial facilities): Provided, That such payment shall be made only to an individual or family who is unable to secure a dwelling unit in a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937, or under a State or local program found by the Administrator to have the same general purposes as the Federal program under such Act, or a dwelling unit assisted under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965: Provided further, That payments under this paragraph shall be available only in the case of families, and individuals sixty-two years of age or over, displaced on or after January 27, 1964.

[(d)] (e) The Administrator is authorized to establish such rules and regulations as he may deem appropriate in carrying out the provisions of this section and may provide in any contract with a local public agency, or in regulations promulgated by the Administrator, that determinations of any duly designated officer or agency as to eligibility for and the amount of relocation assistance authorized by this section shall be final and conclusive for any purposes and not subject to re-determination by any court or any other officer. Such regulations shall include provisions to assure that relocation payments, as authorized by this section, shall be made as promptly as possible to all families, individuals, business concerns, and nonprofit organizations found to be eligible for such payments by reason of their having been displaced from property in the urban renewal area, without regard to any subsequent proceedings, determinations, or events relating to such property which do not bear upon whether such displacement in fact occurred.

REHABILITATION GRANTS

SEC. 115. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, the Administrator may authorize a local public agency to make grants (and the urban renewal project may include the making of such grants) as prescribed in this section. Any such grant may be made only to an individual or family, as described in subsection (b), who owns and occupies a structure in an urban renewal area, and only for the purpose of covering the cost of repairs and improvements necessary to make such structure conform to public standards for decent, safe, and sanitary housing as required by applicable codes or other requirements of the urban renewal plan for the area. Any contract for financial assistance under this title shall provide that the capital grant otherwise payable for the project shall be increased by an amount equal to the total amount of the grants under this section and that no part of the total amount of such grants shall be required to be contributed as part of the local grant-in-aid.

In case the income of the individual or family exceeds $2,000 a year, a grant may be made under this section, subject to the limitations specified in clauses (1) and (2) of the preceding sentence, but only in an amount not to exceed that portion of the cost of the repairs and improvements which cannot be paid for with any available loan that can be amortized as part of such individual's or family's monthly housing expense without requiring such monthly housing expense to exceed 25 per centum of such individual's or family's monthly income.

The Secretary is authorized to make agreements with respect to servicing loans held by or insured by the Secretary under this section and purchasing such insured loans on such terms and conditions as he may prescribe: Provided, That no purchase agreement shall obligate the Secretary to purchase such an insured loan before the expiration of an initial period of five years from the date of the note. Any contract of insurance executed by the Secretary shall be an obligation supported by the full faith and credit of the United States and incontestable except for fraud or material misrepresentation of which the holder has actual knowledge. (h) *The Secretary is authorized to issue notes to the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain funds necessary for discharging obligations under this section and for authorized expenditures out of the Fund, but, except as may be authorized in appropriation Acts, not for the original capital or any additional capital of the Fund or to reimburse the Fund for losses from any sales of loans at less than par value. Such notes shall be in such form and denominations and have such maturities and be subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. (j) The Secretary may also utilize the Fund—

The form, denominations, maturities, and other terms and conditions of such notes shall be prescribed by the Secretary with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Each note shall bear interest at such rate as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average market yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the average maturities of the loans held by the Secretary in the Account, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum, during the month of June preceding the fiscal year in which the loans were made. Such interest shall be payable annually upon any sum so deposited until an amount equal to such sum is paid from the Fund or Account to which it was deposited and returned to miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

(b) Any sums in the Rural Housing Insurance Fund or the Rural Housing Direct Loan Account which the Secretary determines are in excess of amounts needed to meet the obligations and carry out the purposes of such Fund or Account shall be returned to miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

HOUSING ACT OF 1961

[TITLE VII—OPEN SPACE LAND]

TITLE VII—OPEN-SPACE LAND AND URBAN BEAUTIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 701. (a) The Congress finds that a combination of economic, social, governmental, and technological forces have caused a rapid expansion of the Nation's urban areas, which has created critical problems of service and finance for all levels of government and which, combined with a rapid population growth in such areas, threatens severe problems of urban and suburban living, including the loss of valuable open-space land in such areas, for the preponderant majority of the Nation's present and future population.

(b) The Congress further finds that there is an urgent need both for the additional provision of parks and other open-space areas in the developed portions of the Nation's urban areas and for greater and better coordinated local efforts to beautify and improve open space and other public land throughout urban areas, to facilitate their increased use and enjoyment by the Nation's urban population.

[(b)] (c) It is the purpose of this title to help curb urban sprawl and prevent the spread of urban blight and deterioration, to encourage more economic and desirable urban development, and to help provide necessary recreational, conservation, and scenic areas by assisting State and local governments in taking prompt action to (1) provide and preserve open-space land which is essential to the proper long-range development and welfare of the Nation's urban areas, in accordance with plans for the allocation of such land for open-space purposes, and (2) beautify and improve open-space and other public urban land, in accordance with programs to encourage and coordinate local public and private efforts toward this end.

[FEDERAL GRANTS]

GRANTS FOR PRESERVATION OF OPEN-SPACE LAND

SEC. 702. (a) In order to encourage and assist in the timely acquisition of land to be used as permanent open-space land, as defined herein, the Housing and Home Finance Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") is authorized to [enter into contracts to] make grants to States and local public bodies acceptable to the Administrator as capable of carrying out the provisions of this [title] section to help finance the acquisition of title to, or other permanent interests in, such land. The amount of any such grant shall not exceed [20] 30 per centum of the total cost, as approved by the Administrator, of acquiring such interests: Provided, That this limitation may be increased to not to exceed [30] 40 per centum in the case of a grant extended to a public body which (1) exercises responsibilities consistent with the purposes of this [title] section for an urban area as a whole, or (2) exercises or participates in the exercise of such responsibilities for all or a substantial portion of an urban area pursuant to an interstate or other intergovernmental compact or agreement. [The faith of the United States is pledged to the payment of all grants contracted for under this title.]

[(b)] The Administrator may enter into contracts to make grants under this title aggregating not to exceed $75,000,000. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amounts necessary to provide for the payment of such grants as well as to carry out all other purposes of this title. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title. All funds so appropriated shall remain available until expended.

(c) No grants under this title shall be used to defray development costs (except as authorized under section 706), or the additional price which is attributable to improvements to be retained on open-space land which are not incidental to the proposed open-space uses, or ordinary State or local governmental expenses, or to help finance the acquisition by a public body of land located outside the urban area for which it exercises (or participates in the exercise of) responsibilities consistent with the purpose of this title.

(d) The Administrator may set such further terms and conditions for assistance under this title as he determines to be desirable.

(e) The Administrator shall consult with the Secretary of the Interior on the general policies to be followed in reviewing applications for grants. To assist the Administrator in such review, the Secretary of the Interior shall furnish him appropriate information on the status of recreational planning for the areas to be [served by the open-space land acquired] assisted with the grants. The Administrator shall provide current information to the Secretary from time to time on significant program developments.

(f) No grant shall be made under this title after October 1, 1969, except pursuant to a contract or commitment entered into on or before such date.

PLANNING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 703. (a) The Administrator shall [enter into contracts to] make grants for the acquisition of land under [this title] section 702(a) only if he finds that (1) the proposed use of the land for permanent open space is important to the execution of a comprehensive plan for urban area meeting criteria he has established for such plans, and (2) a program of comprehensive planning (as defined in section 701(d) of the Housing Act of 1954) is being actively carried on for the urban area.

* * * * *

CONVERSIONS TO OTHER USES

SEC. 704. No open-space land for the acquisition of which a grant has been made under this title shall, without the approval of the Administrator, be converted to uses other than those originally approved by him. The Administrator shall approve no conversion of land from open-space use unless he finds that such conversion is essential to the orderly development and growth of the urban area involved and is in accord with the then applicable comprehensive plan, meeting criteria established by him. The Administrator shall approve any such conversion only upon such conditions as he deems necessary to assure the substitution of other open-space land of at least equal fair market value and of as nearly as feasible equivalent usefulness and location.

GRANTS FOR PROVISION OF OPEN-SPACE LAND IN BUILT-UP URBAN AREAS

SEC. 705. (a) The Administrator is further authorized to make grants to States and local public bodies to help finance the acquisition of title to, or other permanent interests in, developed land in built-up portions of urban areas to be cleared and used as permanent open-space land, as defined herein. The Administrator shall make such grants only where the local governing body determines that adequate open-space land cannot effectively be provided through the use of existing undeveloped or predominantly undeveloped land and the Administrator determines that the proposed acquisition is important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality. Grants under this section shall not exceed the lesser of (1) $500,000 or (2) 40 per centum of the cost of acquiring such title or other interests and of necessary demolition and removal of improvements.

(b) Financial assistance extended to any project under this title may include grants for relocation payments, as herein defined. Such grants may be in addition to other financial assistance under this title, and no part of the amount of such relocation payments shall be required to be contributed as a local grant. The term "relocation payments" means payments by the applicant which are (1) made to an individual, family, business concern, or nonprofit organization displaced, after March 4, 1965, by a project assisted under this title, (2) not otherwise authorized under any Federal law, and (3) made only on such terms and conditions and subject to such limitations (to the extent applicable, but not including the date of displacement) as are provided for relocation payments, at the time such payments are approved, by sections 114 (b), (c), and (d) of the Housing Act of 1949. Relocation payments authorized by this subsection shall be made subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Administrator.

GRANTS FOR URBAN BEAUTIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT

SEC. 706. The Administrator is authorized to make grants, as herein provided, to States and local public bodies to assist in carrying out local programs for the greater use and enjoyment of open-space and other public land in urban areas. The Administrator shall establish criteria for such programs to assure that each (1) represents significant and effective efforts, involving all available public and private resources for the beautification of such land and its improvement for open-space uses, and (2) is important to the comprehensively planned development of the locality. Grants made under this section shall not exceed 40 per centum of the amount by which the cost of the activities carried on by an applicant during a fiscal year under an approved program exceeds its usual expenditures for comparable activities: Provided, That, notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the Administrator may use not to exceed $5,000,000 of the funds available for grants under this section to make grants in amounts up to the full cost of activities which he determines to have special value in developing and demonstrating new and improved methods and materials for use in carrying out the purposes of this section.

LABOR STANDARDS

SEC. 707. (a) The Administrator shall take such action as may be necessary to insure that all laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors in the performance of construction work financed with the assistance of grants under this title shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended. The Administrator shall not approve any such grant without first obtaining adequate assurance that these labor standards will be maintained upon the construction work.

(b) The Secretary of Labor shall have, with respect to the labor standards specified in subsection (a), the authority and functions set forth in Reorganization Plan Numbered 14 of 1950 (15 F.R. 3176; 64 Stat. 1267; 5 U.S.C. 1332-15), and section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934, as amended (48 Stat. 948; 40 U.S.C. 276c).

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE, STUDIES, AND PUBLICATION OF INFORMATION

SEC. [705] 708. In order to carry out the purpose of this title the Administrator is authorized to provide technical assistance to State and local public bodies and to undertake such studies and publish such information, either directly or by contract, as he shall determine to be desirable. [There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to provide for such assistance, studies, and publication. Nothing contained in this section shall limit any authority of the Administrator under any other provision of law.】 The Administrator is authorized to use during any fiscal year not to exceed $100,000 of the funds available for grants under this title to undertake such studies and publish such information.

FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATION

SEC. 5. (a) * * *

* * * * *

(c) Such associations shall lend their funds only on the security of their shares or on the security of first liens upon real property within one hundred miles of their home office which constitute first liens upon homes, combinations of homes and business property, other dwelling units, or combinations of dwelling units, including homes, and business property involving only minor or incidental business use (all of which may be defined by the Board): Provided, That not more than $40,000 for each single-family dwelling, and not more than such amount per room as the Board may determine by regulation within the limits allowable (at the time of the loan) in section 207(c) (3) of the National Housing Act for any other dwelling unit covered by such lien, shall be loaned on the security of any such lien, and the Board shall by regulation limit to not more than 15 per centum of the assets of the association the aggregate amount or amounts of the investments which may be made by an association under the foregoing provisions of this sentence on the security of property which comprises or includes more than four dwelling units or does not constitute homes or combinations of homes and business property; except that not exceeding 20 per centum of the assets of such association may be loaned on the security of first liens upon improved real estate without regard to the foregoing limitations, and additional sums not exceeding 20 per centum of the assets of an association may be used without regard to such area restriction for the making or purchase of participating interests in first liens on real property of the type described in this sentence in the matter preceding this proviso: And provided further, That any portion of the assets of such associations may be invested in obligations of, or fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States, or in the stock or bonds of a Federal Home Loan Bank, or in obligations, participations, or other instruments of or issued by, or fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the Federal National Mortgage Association or any other agency of the United States; or in general obligations of any State or of any political subdivision thereof; and as used in this proviso the term "State" shall include the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the possessions of the United States: And provided further, That any such association which is converted from a State-chartered institution may continue to make loans in the territory in which it made loans while operating under State charter. In addition to the loans and investments otherwise authorized, such associations may purchase, subject to all the provisions of this paragraph except the area restriction, loans secured by first liens on improved real estate which are insured under the provisions of the National Housing Act, as amended, or insured as provided in the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, or chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code. Loans on the security of buildings substantially all of which are used or are to be used after completion for college dormitories, fraternity houses, or sorority houses, or for residential purposes by the staffs of community hospitals, shall be considered as loans on "other dwelling units" for the purposes of this subsection.

Without regard to any other provision of this subsection except the area requirement, any such association is authorized to invest a sum not in excess of 20 per centum of the assets of such association in loans insured under title I of the National Housing Act, in home improvement loans insured under title II of the National Housing Act, in unsecured loans insured or guaranteed under the provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, or chapter 37 of title 38 of the United States Code, and in other loans for property alteration, repair, or improvement: Provided, That no such loan, unless so insured or guaranteed, shall be made in excess of $5,000. Participating interests in loans secured by mortgages which have the benefit of insurance or guaranty (or a commitment therefor) under the National Housing Act, the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, or chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code, shall not be taken into account in determining the amount of loans which an association may make within any of the percentage limitations contained in the first proviso of this subsection.

Without regard to any other provision of this subsection, any such association is authorized to invest in loans, obligations, and advances of credit (all of which are hereinafter referred to as "loans") made for the payment of expenses of college or university education, but no association shall make any investment in loans under this paragraph if the principal amount of its investment in such loans, exclusive of any investment which is or which at the time of its making was otherwise authorized, would thereupon exceed 5 per centum of its assets.

Without regard to any other provision of this subsection except the area restriction, any such association whose general reserves, surplus, and undivided profits aggregate a sum in excess of 5 per centum of its withdrawable accounts is authorized to invest an amount not exceeding at any one time 5 per centum of such withdrawable accounts in loans to finance the acquisition and development of land for primarily residential usage, subject to such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe.

Without regard to any other provision of this subsection except the area restriction and the dollar amount limitation, any such association may invest an amount not exceeding at any one time 5 per centum of its assets in nonamortized loans which are made on the security of first liens upon homes or combinations of homes and business property and which (1) are repayable within a period of eighteen months, (2) provide that interest payments be made at least semiannually, and (3) do not exceed 80 per centum of the appraised value of the property involved. For the purposes of this paragraph the term "first liens" includes the assignment of the whole of the beneficial interest in a trust having a corporate trustee whereunder real estate held in the trust can be subjected to the satisfaction of the obligation or obligations secured with the same priority as a first mortgage, a first deed of trust, or a first trust deed in the jurisdiction where the real estate is located.

Without regard to any other provision of this subsection except the area restriction, any such association is authorized to invest an amount not exceeding at any one time 5 per centum of its assets in amortized loans or participating interests therein which are secured by first liens upon improved real estate used to provide housing facilities for the aging, subject to the following qualifications:

(1) each such loan shall be repayable within a period of 30 years;

(2) no such loan shall exceed 90 per centum of the appraised value of the improved real estate given as security therefor; and

(3) each such loan—

(A) shall be made upon and secured by real estate which is improved by housing accommodations, individual or multiple, designed for the purpose of providing accommodations for occupancy by aging persons, or of providing rest homes or nursing homes, so constructed or altered as to be suitable primarily for the occupancy of persons over fifty-five years of age and limited principally to the occupancy of such persons; and

(B) shall be made for the implementation of the purpose described in clause (A).

Without regard to any other provision of this subsection, any such association is authorized to invest not more than 5 per centum of its assets in, or in interests in, real property located within urban renewal areas as defined in subsection (a) of section 110 of the Housing Act of 1949 and obligations secured by first liens on real property so located, but no investment shall be made by an association under this sentence in real property or any interest therein if the aggregate investment of the association under this sentence in real property and interests therein, determined as prescribed by the Board, would thereupon exceed 2 per centum of the assets of the association.

Without regard to any other provision of this subsection, any such association whose general reserves, surplus, and undivided profits aggregate a sum in excess of 5 per centum of its withdrawable accounts is authorized to invest in, to lend to, or to commit itself to lend to any business development credit corporation incorporated in the State in which the head office of such association is situated, in the same manner and to the same extent as the statutes of such State authorize a savings and loan association organized under the laws of said State to invest in, to lend to, or to commit itself to lend to such business development credit corporation, but the aggregate amount of such investments, loans, and commitments of any such association outstanding at any time shall not exceed one-half of 1 per centum of the total outstanding loans made by such association, or $250,000, whichever is the lesser.

For the purpose of this section the terms "real property" and "real estate" shall include a leasehold or subleasehold estate in real property under a lease or sublease the term of which does not expire, or which is renewable automatically or at the option of the holder (or at the option of the association) so as not to expire, for at least fifteen years beyond the maturity of the debt: Provided, That in any State or area within a State where the Board shall find that a substantial part of the land occupied by or suitable for residential structures is available for purchase only on a leasehold basis, any such association may make a loan on the security of a first lien on the remainder of the term of any such leasehold which extends or is renewable for at least ten years beyond the maturity of such loan.

Any such association is authorized to invest in the capital stock, obligations, or other securities of any corporation organized under the laws of the State, District, Commonwealth, territory, or possession in which the home office of the association is located, if the entire capital stock of such corporation is available for purchase only by savings and loan associations of that State, District, Commonwealth, territory, or possession and by Federal savings and loan associations having their home offices therein, but no association may make any investment under this sentence if its aggregate outstanding investment under this sentence, determined as prescribed by the Board, would thereupon exceed 1 per centum of its assets.

Without regard to any other provision of this subsection, any such association may, to such extent as the Federal Home Loan Bank Board may by regulation permit, invest in loans, and interests in loans, secured by mortgages as to which the association has the benefit of insurance under title X of the National Housing Act or of a commitment or agreement for such insurance, and investments under this sentence shall not be included in any percentage of assets or other percentage referred to in this subsection.

Any building association, building and loan association, or savings and loan association organized and operating under the laws of the District of Columbia shall have the same powers with respect to the investment of its assets as are authorized for Federal savings and loan associations under this subsection, and shall be governed by such regulations as the Board may prescribe in relation to the exercise of such powers by Federal savings and loan associations.

(b) In the performance of, and with respect to, the functions, powers, and duties vested in him by this Act the Administrator may—

(1) sue and be sued in any court of record of a State having general jurisdiction, or in any United States district court, and jurisdiction is conferred upon such district court to determine such controversies without regard to the amount in controversy; but no attachment, injunction, garnishment, or other similar process, mesne or final, shall be issued against the Administrator or his property;

(2) under regulations prescribed by him, assign or sell at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of for cash or credit, in his discretion and upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as the Administrator shall determine to be reasonable, any evidence of debt, contract, claim, personal property, or security assigned to or held by him in connection with the pay-

(3) deal with, complete, renovate, improve, modernize, insure, or rent, or sell for cash or credit upon such terms and conditions and for such consideration as the Administrator shall determine to be reasonable, any real property conveyed to or otherwise acquired by him in connection with the payment of loans granted or the performance of leases insured under this Act;

(4) pursue to final collection, by way of compromise or otherwise, all claims against third parties assigned to the Administrator in connection with loans made or leases insured by him. The power to convey and to execute in the name of the Administrator deeds of conveyance, deeds of release, assignments and satisfactions of mortgages, and any other written instrument relating to real property or any interest therein acquired by the Administrator pursuant to the provisions of this Act may be exercised by the Administrator or by any officer or agent appointed by him without the execution of any express delegation of power or power of attorney. SECTION 24 OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACTLOANS ON FARM LANDS

SEC. 24. Any national banking association may make real estate loans secured by first liens upon improved real estate, including improved farm land and improved business and residential properties. A loan secured by real estate within the meaning of this section shall be in the form of an obligation or obligations secured by a mortgage, trust deed, or other instrument upon real estate, which shall constitute a first lien on real estate in fee simple or, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency, on a leasehold under a lease which does not expire for at least 10 years beyond the maturity date of the loan, and any national banking association may purchase any obligation so secured when the entire amount of such obligation is sold to the association. The amount of any such loan hereafter made shall not exceed 50 per centum of the appraised value of the real estate offered as security and no such loan shall be made for a longer term than five years; except that (1) any such loan may be made in an amount not to exceed 66⅔ per centum of the appraised value of the real estate offered as security and for a term not longer than ten years if the loan is secured by an amortized mortgage, deed of trust, or other such instrument under the terms of which the installment payments are sufficient to amortize 40 per centum or more of the principal of the loan within a period of not more than ten years, and (2) any such loan may be made in an amount not to exceed 66⅔ per centum of the appraised value of the real estate offered as security and for a term not longer than twenty years if the loan is secured by an amortized mortgage, deed of trust, or other such instrument under the terms of which the installment payments are sufficient to amortize the entire principal of the loan within a period of not more than twenty years, and (3) any such loan may be made in an amount not to exceed 75 per centum of the appraised value of the real estate offered as security and for a term not longer than 20 years if the loan is secured by an amortized mortgage, deed of trust, or other such instrument under the terms of which the installment payments are sufficient to amortize the entire principal of the loan within the period ending on the date of its maturity, and (4) the foregoing limitations and restrictions shall not prevent the renewal or extension of loans heretofore made and shall not apply to real estate loans which are insured under the provisions of title II, title VI, title VIII, section 8 of title I, or title IX of the National Housing Act or which are insured by the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, or the Act entitled "An Act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937, as amended, or title V of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, and shall not apply to real estate loans which are fully guaranteed or insured by a State, or by a State authority for the payment of the obligations of which the faith and credit of the State is pledged, if under the terms of the guaranty or insurance agreement the association will be assured of repayment in accordance with the terms of the loan. Notwithstanding the foregoing limitations and restrictions in this section, any national banking association may make loans for land development which are secured by mortgages insured under title X of the National Housing Act. No such association shall make such loans in an aggregate sum in excess of the amount of the capital stock of such association paid in and unimpaired plus the amount of its unimpaired surplus fund, or in excess of 70 per centum of the amount of its time and savings deposits, whichever is the greater. Any such association may continue hereafter as heretofore to receive time and savings deposits and to pay interest on the same, but the rate of interest which such association may pay upon such time deposits or upon savings or other deposits shall not exceed the maximum rate authorized by law to be paid upon such deposits by State banks or trust companies organized under the laws of the State in which such association is located.

MINORITY VIEWS

THE ADMINISTRATION'S RENT SUPPLEMENT PROPOSAL

INTRODUCTION

The Administration's rent supplement proposal contained in section 101 of this bill is foreign to American concepts.

The proposal kills the incentive of the American family to improve its living accommodations by its own efforts.

It kills the incentive for homeownership; it makes renters wards of the Government.

It is a system of economic integration of housing through Government subsidy.

It is the way of the socialistic state.

KILLING INCENTIVE

Under section 101(d) of the bill the Housing Administrator may subsidize a tenant's rent in an amount up to the difference between the fair market rental for the unit and one-fourth of the tenant's income.

That formula kills the incentive of the American family to improve its living accommodations by its own efforts. A family with $3,000 a year income—$250 a month—could live in a $100-a-month apartment and pay rent of only $62.50 a month (one-fourth of income) with the Government providing a subsidy of $37.50 a month (difference between one-fourth of tenant's income and market rent for the unit). The disincentive of the family to improve its housing accommodations is readily apparent. Should that $250 a month family's income increase to $300 a month, its rent payment would increase to $75 a month and the Federal subsidy would drop to $25 a month. And, of course, if the family's income increased to $400 a month, it would pay the full market rent of $100 a month as one-fourth of family income of $400 a month would equal full market rent for the unit. In other words, the family with $250-a-month income has no incentive to improve its living accommodations by increasing its earnings to enable it to rent better accommodations. It can live in the same accommodations with $250-a-month income as it could if it increased its income to $400 a month.

The formula also produces another type of disincentive to a family improving its living accommodations by its own efforts. That $250-a-month-income family might decide it wants to live in a $200-a-month apartment instead of the $100-a-month unit. Under the formula it could do so. And under the other proposed provisions of this section, this still would be true. The primary requirement for a qualified tenant is that he be unable to obtain standard privately owned housing at a rental no more than one-fourth of his income. As far as the proposed law is concerned, that standard housing could be standard housing suitable to the tenant's needs or suitable to his desires. The Administrator could decide either way. The family would pay the same one-fourth of its income as rent or $62.50 a month and the Government would pay an increased subsidy of $137.50 a month to make up the balance of the fair market rent for the unit. Under the formula the way to better housing is increased Federal subsidy rather than increased individual effort.

When another head of a family earning $400 a month and paying $100 a month rent—without any help from Uncle Sam—saw that his neighbor, earning far less than he, was able to move into a much better apartment with no increase in his rent payments, he suddenly would wake up to the possibility of the formula. This family, otherwise eligible for rent supplements, by free choice could be living in standard but crowded quarters. The head of the family simply does not want to allocate more than $100 a month of his income to housing. With the balance of his income he prefers to enjoy other amenities of life, such as a second car or an extra week's vacation. Rent supplement is his easy way out. He would be eligible for subsidy in a more expensive apartment. He, too, would move to the $200-a-month apartment. He would continue to pay only $100 a month of his income as rent because the Government would provide the other $100 a month necessary to cover the market rent for the unit.

This formula is a formula for killing the American incentive system of improving one's lot by one's own effort. This would be keeping up with the Joneses via Federal subsidies.

THREAT TO HOMEOWNERSHIP

To own one's own home, no matter how modest, is the goal of the typical American family. The rent supplement kills the incentive of a family to achieve that goal. Under FHA underwriting standards a family with \$3,000-a-year income can afford to purchase a home costing $2\frac{1}{2}$ times that amount or a \$7,500 home. The housing cost of such a home would approximate \$60 a month. But as noted in the illustration above, the \$3,000-a-year family by paying \$62.50 a month as rent could live in a partially federally subsidized \$100-a-month rental unit. The cost of such a dwelling unit would approximate \$12,500. Or, as above noted, that same family could also live in a \$200-a-month rental unit and pay only \$62.50 of its income a month as rent with the balance of \$137.50 paid by the Government under the rent supplement formula. The cost of the \$200-a-month rental unit would approximate \$25,000. Why would a family strive to own a \$7,500 home when for approximately the same monthly outlay for housing it could rent a \$12,500 or \$25,000 cost dwelling unit? Not alone would the rent supplement proposal kill incentive for homeownership, it also would be a powerful incentive for a family to discontinue homeownership and become a renter on the Federal dole. That runs counter to the American way of life.

ABSURD FORMULA

Although the subsidy formula contains no dollar amount limitations, indirectly there is a dollar limitation because of the maximum mortgage amount per unit in the FHA section 221(d)(3) program. This is the existing FHA program which would have to be utilized in financing the project. That maximum mortgage amount under existing law is $29,000 for a three or more bedroom unit, in an elevator-type building in a high cost area. This would be left unchanged in this bill for a three bedroom unit but would be increased to $32,987.50 per unit for a four or more bedroom unit under the provisions of section 203(d) of this bill. Such a four-bedroom, two-and-a-half-bath unit would rent for approximately $315 a month. A large, qualified tenant family with only $250-a-month income could live in such a unit with the Government paying a subsidy of $252.50 a month to make up the balance of the market rent for the unit.

But even this does not measure the full amount of Federal subsidy that could be paid. Under FHA mortgage insurance programs, the mortgage limitation is satisfied if the average mortgage for the units in the project does not exceed the mortgage limitation per unit. FHA insured projects can and do have penthouses and our theoretical project would be no exception. It could have a penthouse costing $100,000 and renting for $800 a month.

The occupant could be a large family eligible for rent supplements, with its entire income derived solely from public assistance payments. Under section 101(d) of this bill the tenant's income for purposes of the formula is the "tenant's income as determined by the Administrator pursuant to procedures and regulations established by him" [emphasis supplied]. With this discretionary authority the Housing Administrator might determine that public assistance payments should not be included in tenant's income for purposes of the formula. Accordingly, this family's income would be zero. Applying the formula, one-fourth of the tenant's zero income equals zero, so the tenant would pay no rent. Under the formula the Federal rent supplement may not exceed the difference between one-fourth of the tenant's income and the fair market rental for the unit. So zero (one-fourth of the tenant's zero income) from $800 a month (the fair market rental) leaves the Government paying the full $800 a month market rent as a subsidy. The welfare family can live in the luxurious penthouse.

Fantastic? Of course the results are fantastic. Ridiculous? Of course the results are ridiculous. Absurd? Of course the results are absurd. But they square with the rent supplement formula. It shows just how fantastic, how ridiculous, and how absurd that formula is.

Surely the Congress could devise more sensible limitations than the wide-open, socialistic subsidy formula contained in section 101 of the bill. The Housing Administrator submitted testimony to the committee (p. 255 of hearings) that under the rent supplement program:

* * * it should be possible to accommodate families with incomes of between $3,500 and $6,000 in larger cities and between $3,000 and $5,000 in smaller cities where costs are generally lower.

If that really is the objective of the program, then why not write those limitations into the law?

ECONOMIC INTEGRATION

From a social standpoint, few would argue that one man's rental dollar should buy as much in the way of shelter as another's, within the same general area of our country. Moreover, we can support the goal of those who view with alarm the proliferation of drab Federal housing ghettos, built to accommodate a rigid and disheartening packing together of computerized equals.

But, in the disguise of calling for action against these pockets of federally sponsored sameness in our cities and towns that have low-rent public housing, the administration has recommended a program that would force—with the power of the Federal dollar—what we choose to term “across-the-board economic integration.” This runs through the thinking on the rent supplement proposal, as well as the various land development programs contained within other sections of this bill.

Within broad areas of our Nation, untouched by the Federal housing dollar, we would argue with those who support an initial allocation of $8 billion for the purpose of creating a national system of unequal opportunity in housing. We oppose the view of those who would move the $2,000-a-year family in the apartment next door to the $5,000-a-year tenant, and into the $15,000-a-year neighborhood, solely through rent subsidies. Moreover, we seriously question whether the man paying $150 a month for an apartment would understand why his next door neighbor should receive equal value for half the rent. From a social standpoint, there is far more to neighborhood preference than the monthly cost of one's dwelling. In short, as the respected Housing Affairs Letter of April 16, 1965, put it: “Can this world's economic lions and economic lambs lie down en masse in the same veldt?”

Keep in mind, it has been made abundantly clear that rent supplements would be a nationwide program. On May 17, during the final stage of hearings on this bill, Congressman Clawson asked the Housing Administrator, “This is going to be a rather broad program, then, is it not, if we are going to move the rent supplement program in all areas involved?”

Mr. WEAVER. “Yes, this will be, of course, nationwide.”

UPPER MIDDLE INCOME FAMILIES

Under date of April 21, 1965, the Housing Agency submitted to the Subcommittee, a table showing income ceilings which would be set for individual cities in administering the rent supplement program. The setting of such income ceilings is purely discretionary with the Administrator. From this table it is readily apparent the Housing Administrator will substantially breach the national median family income ($6,249), in the case of large families. Here are the income limits the Administrator proposes to set for such families in several of the larger cities:

Philadelphia.....	$6,900
Toledo.....	8,050
Pittsburgh.....	7,150
Macon, Ga.....	6,600
Providence.....	6,650
San Antonio.....	6,450
Milwaukee.....	8,300
Paterson, N.J.....	8,100
New York City.....	8,900
Newark.....	8,750
Saginaw, Mich.....	7,850

Whereas the national median income for all families ($6,249) as shown by census data is total family income, the Housing Administrator is not bound by any such specific definition. Quite to the contrary, section 101(d) provides that income of the tenant shall be "the tenant's income as determined by the Administrator pursuant to procedures and regulations established by him." From total family income the Administrator could and doubtless would make one or more exclusions from total family income and thereby reduce the amount of family income that would be counted under the rent supplement proposal. Precedent for this exists in the public housing program. For instance, in New York City up to $2,400 of income earned by secondary wage earners (wife, children, etc.) in the family, can be excluded from the family's total income for purposes of determining eligibility and rent payments. Should the Administrator make a similar exclusion for the rent supplement program, the New York City family income limit of $8,900, as shown in the above table, actually could mean that the total family income was $8,900 plus $2,400 excluded income, or a total, actual income family limit of $11,300. In other words, the rent supplement proposal can reach well up into the middle-income family level.

PUBLIC HOUSING JEOPARDIZED

It is little wonder public housing proponents are greatly disturbed by the Administration's rent supplement proposal. (See testimony of the president of the National Association of Housing & Redevelopment Officials, p. 425 of the hearings.) The rent supplement program could run the public housing program right out of business, because Federal subsidies under rent supplements can be far larger per month, per unit than is possible under public housing. Under the public housing program the Federal subsidy is limited to the amount necessary to pay principal and interest over a 40 year period on cost of the unit. There is no such subsidy limitation under the rent supplement program where the subsidy can cover not alone principal and interest costs of the unit over a 40 year period, but also practically all of the operating costs as well. Needless to say, rent supplements can also run the cooperative housing, and 221(d)(3) subsidized interest rate programs out of business.

In short, the rent supplement program has a Federal subsidy potential that no other Federal housing program can even come close to matching.

$8 BILLION EXPERIMENT

We were told by the Housing Administrator, as well as by other witnesses, that the Administration's rent supplements constitutes an experimental program. But involved in the proposal is the authorization for the Housing Administrator to enter into 40 year contracts with approved housing owners to pay them rent subsidies in amounts not exceeding $50 million prior to July 1, 1966, which maximum amount would be increased by $50 million on July 1 in each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968. In other words by fiscal year 1968, $200 million a year payment contracts could be outstanding, extending for 40 years. Potentially, that makes it an $8 billion program that could extend to the year 2008. To us, that is a whale of an experimental program.

When queried about this $8 billion potential contract cost the Housing Administrator stated that there was "some exaggeration" in the figures. He referred to it as a $200 million contract authorization program. But, turn to page 235 of the hearings. Note the table submitted by the Housing Administrator showing the estimated cost of the rent supplement program for a 100 unit project. Here we find his estimate is that the aggregate rent supplements for this 100 unit project over 40 years will amount to $944,000. That is $9,440 per unit. Since this is supposed to be a 500,000 unit program, the cost of this program alone, based on these figures, is $4.72 billion. We leave it to the reader to decide for himself which of the two cost estimates of the Administrator more accurately reflect the probable cost of the program.

Assuming appropriation and contracting of the full amounts requested ($200 million multiplied by 40 years) there can be no question that the potential cost of the program is $8 billion. With this program dressed up in a $200 million outfit, Congress is confronted with an $8 billion Trojan Horse.

THE MEANS TEST

Additionally, we are puzzled that those who for years have objected to the means test on any and all social programs administered by Federal, State, and local governments have now reversed themselves by embracing the means test explicit in the rent supplement program.

Heretofore, means tests have been administered by various levels of government in an effort to insure that those with higher incomes and readily available assets would be ineligible for programs aimed at assisting those who couldn't afford the minimum requirements of food, shelter, and medical services. Although many charged that such tests were socially obnoxious, nevertheless they were aimed at maintaining a degree of equity for the indigent and low-income individuals and families in the total allocation of resources by the tax-paying public. In short, the means test has been restricted to indigents and those with low incomes in order equitably to carry out various social programs of public assistance.

Under the Administration's rent supplement proposal, however, we find means tests applying to those with incomes reaching far up into the moderate income levels. If such a test were condemned as socially obnoxious before, consistency requires that they be similarly treated with regard to implementation of a rent supplement program. Under this proposal, however, the means test does not have in its defense a proper allocation of public assistance funds aimed at the most needy among our citizens.

To those who doubt that such means tests will be employed by HHFA in connection with rent supplements, we direct your attention to the Housing Administrator's colloquy with Congressman Fino, found on page 263 of the hearings, with regard to a hypothetical situation involving an investigation.

Mr. FINO. All right. How would I be in difficulty if you do not police it or investigate it, supervise it and watch me?

Mr. WEAVER. You will be in difficulty because there will be spot checks, as there always are on these activities, and if this were found, you would be in difficulty for having made a false statement. I think you would be subject to quite a bit of criminal prosecution as well as being put out of the particular project.

Mr. FINO. My time is up.

Mr. WEAVER. And there is one other check, too, which I hate to say.

Mr. FINO. What is that?

Mr. WEAVER. But your friends and neighbors would be very much concerned about this. They are the best investigators that you have in these projects. [Emphasis supplied.]

Upon request, the Housing Administrator supplied for the record the estimated man-hours needed to investigate a prospective list of 100 approved applications for rent supplements. According to the Administrator, in just 77 areas of the country where there are FHA field offices, these investigations would be performed by employees of the HHFA. In all other areas, such investigations would be contracted for with employees and representatives of non-Federal organizations which could be either public or private. It was conceded by proponents in committee that Pinkerton's National Detective Agency could be such an eligible "private" agency.

The following comprise just a few of the tests that would be required, as submitted by the administrator:

1. Check of incomes for 100 approved cases: Check W-2 forms presented, or if no W-2 forms telephone or send form letter to employer to determine if applicant is within the income limit for the area.
2. Check of assets on 100 approved cases: Check to see that the form and certification as to assets is complete and assets are within prescribed limit.

There can be no doubt that rent supplements would direct a means test at middle-income families, in support of a highly questionable social goal, while employing "friends and neighbors" in the very unfriendly and unneighborly role of informers.

BIRTH OF NATIONAL RENTAL STANDARDS

Nowhere in the hearings has the Administration shown evidence that it has studied the impact rent supplements would have on the prevailing patterns of rental rates. With the formula for virtually open-end subsidies, what would hold back limited-dividend and non-profit organizations from building far more expensive multiunit apartment dwellings than those anticipated by the Administration, with the consequent adverse impact on nonsubsidized rents? Indeed, under the language of section 101, the greatest rewards would derive to those organizations and tenants who build and occupy the most costly units.

Moreover, section 101 states that a family must first pay 25 percent of its income for rent before receiving any assistance from the Federal Government in the form of rent supplements. If this section were enacted, every landlord in the Nation could demand of his tenants that they pay 25 percent of their total family income for rent. Their justification for such a demand? The national standards set by the Federal Government. Anyone paying less, it could be claimed, would be paying less than he should. Such a standard rule of thumb would put enormous pressure on millions of tenants, many of whom voluntarily devote far less than 25 percent of their income for rent. The rent gougers and absentee slum landlords in urban areas would waste little time taking advantage of this.

That this could have a profound economic and social impact can be seen by the Administration's testimony on page 218, where it is stated that the median gross monthly rent for families in the United States, according to the 1960 census was $71. The median national family income for that same year was $6,249. From this, the typical American family paid 13.6 percent of its income for rent—a little more than half of that proposed as the "norm" in the bill.

The precedent for widespread landlord checks on tenants' income conveniently would be found in the proposed means test to be employed in administering rent supplements. On page 262 of the hearings, the Housing Administrator states that Federal Income Tax Form W-2 would be checked in order to determine a tenants' income eligibility for rent supplements. In most cases, these forms would be surrendered to non-Government employees. Where this is impossible, "telephone or send form letter to employer to determine if applicant is within the income limit."

Can even the most cautious analyst deny the opportunities this opens to unscrupulous landlords?

WHO IS HOODWINKING WHOM?

From the outset of the hearings, it was apparent that section 101, rent supplements, was in deep trouble. Throughout the hearings, even those witnesses who normally support broader housing legislation were unrelenting in their criticism.

In a last-minute attempt to bail out the floundering rent supplement program, the committee eliminated the income floor for those eligible to receive Federal rent payments. That this change is illusory and an attempt to hoodwink Congress can be seen by the Housing Administrator's answer to a question by Senator Douglas during the Senate hearings, "Is there any reason why rent subsidies could not work for poor families, if the committee should decide to lower the income floor below $3,000?"

Mr. WEAVER. In the first place it goes back to something you said earlier and that is while we do have a volume of both limited dividend and nonprofit corporations which are ready and able to carry out the rent supplementation in the middle-income fields, it is my strong feeling that first many of these groups, certainly the limited-dividend groups are out, and many of the well-motivated nonprofit groups are really not in a position to take on all the management problems that are indigenous to this particular area of low-income management.

As if to underline this, in answer to a similar question from Senator Proxmire, "Why wouldn't they (low-income families) be the ones to get rent subsidies?" the Housing Administrator answered:

You are not going to get the limited dividend companies building and adequately managing houses in the low-income segment.

From these candid admissions by the Housing Administrator during the Senate hearings, we leave it to the reader of this report to decide for himself the extent to which the most needy families would benefit by the committee action in eliminating the income floor from the original Administration bill.

As we have pointed out, while the open-end formula in the amended bill would permit flagrant abuses within both the lower and upper income brackets, the basic socio-economic inequities remain.

CONCLUSION

On page 178 of the hearings the Housing Administrator, speaking of the rent supplement program, states:

This program has received the greatest attention among the President's housing recommendations. It is a vital part of the proposed Administration bill.

In our opinion the President has been sold a bill of goods. We cannot believe that he would "buy" such an incredibly wide open subsidy proposal had he been fully advised as to the potential evils of the program. This is a system of making the rent dollar of the beneficiary worth up to double or more the rent dollar of the unassisted taxpayer. It is unequal opportunity in housing by government fiat. It is legislated discrimination against the self-sufficient citizen.

We are certain the American public will not "buy" such nonsense as is contained in this proposal.

We hope that the Congress, alerted to the pitfalls of the proposal, will reject it.

Section 101, the rent supplement proposal, should be stricken from the bill.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVE FLORENCE P. DWYER

Since, in so many ways, the Housing bill reported by our committee is a model of progressive bipartisan cooperation, it is cause for particular regret that the bill is seriously marred by retention of the administration's rent supplement plan for middle-income families.

The bill reflects, among other things, the impressive contribution made by the minority of the Housing subcommittee through the introduction of a Republican alternative housing bill by Representative Widnall, our ranking member, Representative Fino, Representative Harvey, and myself. We helped remove the "new towns" program under which the Government would supervise and subsidize the building of entire new communities. We incorporated our own rent certificate plan as a less expensive substitute for a portion of the conventional public housing program. We supported improvements in the housing for the elderly, college housing, FHA, and FNMA programs. We initiated a new FHA low downpayment program for veterans. We helped provide greater assistance and more equitable compensation for families and small businesses forced to relocate because of housing or urban renewal projects. We tightened up the urban renewal program, encouraged rehabilitation rather than destruction of existing houses, stimulated better use of building and zoning codes as a means of preventing slums, and supported assistance to communities in handling their water supply and sewerage disposal problems.

The big flaw in the bill, however, remains the rent supplement plan under which the Government would subsidize the rental payments of tenants. Although we succeeded in lowering the income limits so that truly low-income families might be eligible, the proposed program continues essentially to be a subsidy for middle-income families including those well above median income level. It is a program without effective standards and qualifications; it was sharply criticized by supporters of housing legislation during the subcommittee's hearings; and, if enacted, it will invite endless inequities.

The statement of minority views in this report thoroughly catalogs what is wrong with the rent supplement program. But what disturbs me most about this administration proposal is the total absence of any scale of values or sense of priorities. While the Government has just determined that family incomes of $3,300 or less represent the level of poverty, and the census of 1960 revealed that the median family income in the United States is $6,250, the administration nevertheless recommends subsidizing rents for families well above the median income level and two or three times the poverty level.

At a time when we have begun a mammoth war against poverty, when millions of American families lag tragically far behind the general prosperity of the country, such a proposal as the rent supplement plan not only lacks any justification but represents an affront to justice and commonsense. I hope the House will reject this provision of the housing bill.

In another particular, too, I believe the bill is deficient. During both subcommittee and full committee consideration of the bill, I proposed an amendment to require submission of proposed urban renewal projects in communities having a population of 150,000 or less to a referendum of local residents. This amendment was rejected.

Nevertheless, I believe such an amendment would greatly strengthen the urban renewal program and encourage it to play the constructive role intended for it in programs of local community development. Public dissatisfaction with urban renewal has been growing rapidly in recent years—not, I believe, because of basic disagreement with the purpose of the program but because of the failure of individual projects to accomplish the purpose.

Supporters of urban renewal pay lipservice to the importance of mobilizing community understanding, cooperation, and support behind a community development, including urban renewal, program. Too often, however, local redevelopment agencies proceed with their programs with only token efforts to involve the community as a whole in the planning and implementation of an urban renewal project, thereby encouraging widespread suspicion, disaffection, and opposition.

The requirement of a public referendum would force local agencies and governing bodies to take their people into their confidence, to solicit their ideas, to consider their needs, and to obtain their consent. It could help make urban renewal the democratic, communitywide program it was intended to be, and permit the program to serve the real needs of individual communities.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVES BILL BROCK AND ALBERT W. JOHNSON

Our views on the matter of title I, particularly as regards rent supplements, are contained elsewhere in these pages. Our supplementary views here deal with the establishment of an interest rate of 3 percent for three programs, the 221(d)(3) program apart from rent supplements, the college housing program, and the 202 elderly program.

The merit of these programs, particularly that dealing with the college housing and 202 elderly housing program, is well known. This is beside the point. There is a principle involved.

The Government should not borrow money, especially while it continues its deficit operations and in face of its staggering balance-of-payments problems, at an interest rate higher than that at which it lends. To do so is only to add to and increase the taxpayers' burdens, and complicate the Government's financing problems. It evidences an apparent desire to avoid responsibility.

Consequently, we oppose the sections of the bill establishing the subsidized 3 percent interest rate. This has, once again, nothing to do with the merit of the programs concerned. It is irresponsible for this body to authorize lending money for these programs at a lower interest rate than the Government's cost.

BILL BROCK.

ALBERT W. JOHNSON.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVE BURT L. TALCOTT

I concur in the minority views, but believe more and special emphasis should be given to the objectionable features of the "rent supplement" proposals of section 101.

There can be little doubt that the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 was originally, and still is, aimed at centralizing the control and federalizing the operation of American housing. Fulfillment of these objectives would more nearly and more quickly socialize housing than the King-Anderson bill would socialize medical care.

Public housing has not responded rapidly enough to suit the social planners. Success appeared easier by making America's great middle class the target. "Rent supplements"—actual payments by fellow taxpayers—to landlords of families earning between approximately $4,800 and $10,000 per year was proposed. When the real consequences of the original "rent supplement" proposals became generally known, the proponents simply reduced the lower qualifying limits to superficially include the poor—but the upper limits have not been reduced. Language may have been changed to include the poor, but the target and emphasis will remain, namely, the moderate income group. America's great middle class does not need or want part of its rent paid by fellow taxpayers.

When many within the administration are deploring U.S. housing (although far superior to any in the world), nothing in the bill was proposed for housing of the most disadvantaged family in the country—the migrant farm laborer. Proponents propose to give rent supplements to the moderate income group, but forget the poorest of the poor.

The proposed rent supplement program should be eliminated from the housing bill because it provides the vehicle for subsidizing the rents of more than half of the families in the United States. The public housing program is being extended at twice the annual rate of construction for the past several years. The FHA mortgage insurance system is replete with special programs for moderate-income families. Obviously, these programs have enjoyed a measure of success in meeting their objectives, and the committee has expressed its confidence by extending these programs for an additional 4 years.

There are at least 20 valid objections to this program, any one of which is sufficiently compelling to justify its rejection by the House by an overwhelming vote.

Some reasons why the proposed rent supplement program should be rejected by the House are:

1. It is a new program ostensibly directed at providing housing assistance for low-income families. Yet the same bill provides 60,000 additional public housing units for each of the next 4 years—almost twice the public housing rate for the past several years.

2. It is limited to new construction, yet the largest source of housing for low-income families is the existing housing inventory. The rent supplement program is premised on the mistaken belief that everyone—regardless of income—is entitled to a new dwelling unit.

3. It involves 40-year contracts between the Federal Government and mortgagors with no way of determining the ultimate financial impact on American taxpayers.

4. It makes meaningless the sacrifices of millions of low- and moderate-income families who today own and occupy or rent adequate shelter (according to the 1960 census, 72 percent of families who earn less than $4,000 per year, and 92 percent of families earning between $4,000 and $8,000 per year, live in adequate housing).

5. It holds out a false hope to 8 million low-income families—presently living in adequate shelter—that they too are entitled to have part of their shelter costs paid by the American taxpayers.

6. The upper income limits for determining eligibility for rent supplements are vague and subject to arbitrary decision by Government officials as to the ability or inability of a family or individual to obtain standard shelter with 25 percent of income. The bill contains no maximum rent supplement for any one family or individual. The Administrator would have the authority to extend rent supplements to families of moderate income.

7. It would propose a “means test” on low-income families and cause Government employees and neighbors (according to HHFA Administrator Weaver’s testimony) to pry into family income sources to make sure that the rent supplement is of proper amount.

8. It provides no ceiling on the subsidy per unit, thereby permitting rent doles in excess of public housing subsidies.

9. It would provide rent supplements based on income alone. Nothing in the bill would bar supplements to a family of low income having substantial assets.

10. It makes individuals eligible for rent supplements without regard to age or ability or willingness to work. The Administrator could qualify an able but indolent 21-year-old for a rent supplement.

11. It was advocated by the Administration to permit the phasing out of the FHA section 221(d)(3) below-market interest rate program (presently $3\frac{7}{8}$ percent)—an objective sought by the Budget Bureau because of the impact of the latter program on the budget. Yet the committee has approved a 4-year extension of the program with a 3-percent rate, thereby removing the primary motivation for the rent supplement program.

12. It would authorize the Housing Administrator to contract with private agencies for services in the selection of tenants and delegate to such private agencies the authority to issue certificates of eligibility to receive Federal rent supplements. This delegation of Government responsibility to non-Government entities in selecting the beneficiaries and the amount of a Federal rent dole is without precedent. It was conceded in committee that the Pinkerton's National Detective Agency would qualify as "such agency."

13. It would increase the complexity of housing statutes which already include public housing for low-income families and several FHA programs for moderate-income families. The housing standards of low- and moderate-income families have improved steadily during the past 20 years. There is no justification for grafting a multibillion-dollar rent dole on top of the existing structure of housing laws.

14. It would provide rent supplements for elderly and handicapped persons; yet there are three Federal housing programs for such persons already in existence, i.e., (1) public housing, (2) direct submarket interest rate loans, and (3) FHA section 231 housing.

15. It would provide rent supplements for persons displaced by Government action notwithstanding the existence at present of a variety of housing programs and other benefits for these people, i.e., public housing, FHA section 221(d)(2), (d)(3), and (d)(4), and relocation allowances.

16. In its inception the rent supplement program was not intended for low-income families. To insist now on the program as one also for low-income families is to cling to the form when the objective is no longer in view. A new multibillion-dollar housing program, committing the American taxpayers to 40 years of disbursing a rent dole, should rest on firmer foundation and be the product of more thorough staff preparation.

17. It would stifle incentive by confronting a tenant family with a reduction in its rent dole to the extent of increases in family income.

18. It is premised on the false assumption that the integration of diverse economic groups (i.e., welfare recipients, upper middle-income, etc.) is necessary to achieve a Great Society.

19. By making rent supplements a permanent long-range (40 years) housing program to neutralize high rent levels flowing from high interest rates, the Congress would materially impair the many years' effort by some industry and public interest groups to bring about a reduction in interest rate levels. The proposed rent supplement program reflects a surrender to high mortgage interest rates.

20. As originally submitted the program was under bipartisan attack because it was designed for families of moderate income. The committee-approved version removes the floor—makes low-income families eligible—but eligibility of moderate-income families remains in the measure. It therefore provides the mechanism for extending rent doles to more than half of families in America.

I strongly recommend that the House reject this ill-advised proposal for rent doles to millions of American families whose housing needs are adequately provided through private enterprise and the several Government housing programs which have met the test of time and which are extended in this bill.

REGARDING FHA INSURANCE OF LAND DEVELOPMENT

The inflation of raw land prices in the last 20 years has materially increased the price of housing. The price increase has been caused basically by the continued strong demand for housing. Efforts to profit from this demand have come from two sources: first, the developer-builder, and, second, from the land speculator who usually has other sources of income and is able to get capital gains tax treatment on the sale of raw land.

FHA insurance of land development plays into the hands of the land speculator. It broadens his market. It will increase the number of bidders for the limited amount of land that can be successfully developed and marketed. Everyone under the umbrella of FHA insurance can engage in what is normally a high risk investment operation. Land prices will be forced up more than they would be otherwise. Higher land prices mean higher cost building sites. That will be detrimental to housing.

This provision contained in section 201 of the bill should be stricken.

UNFARLIAMMENTARY PROCEDURE AND INADEQUATE DELIBERATION

Part of my objection to this bill is procedural.

If time, staff, and facilities were available, convincing objections to every new proposal in this legislation could be made; but they are not. My attention and views must be limited to only two titles. I am convinced that the rush for early passage is contributing to bad legislation which is not carefully enough honed by committee consideration, not fully enough examined by experts with differing views, not sufficiently probed by the spotlight of public opinion and not debated thoroughly enough to qualify as properly deliberated. We, as members of the committee and the Congress, have an obligation to our colleagues, constituents, and all U.S. citizens to thoroughly and exhaustively deliberate each item of legislation. We have not fulfilled our obligation with this bill.

The full committee devoted less than 6 hours to this bill—all in executive, secret session—including interrogation of two panels of witnesses (who favored passage blindly), “marking up” the bill, voting, and all. Of course, no adverse witnesses were invited or heard by the full committee. Many of us had questions which were not answered.

This is a $6 to $13 billion bill—with built-in guarantees for perpetuation and escalation for at least 40 years whether housing is needed or not. The bill deserved more and better consideration by our committee.

BURT L. TALCOTT.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF REPRESENTATIVE CHESTER L. MIZE

In this bill, there is a great deal to support. The whole of title IX, dealing with farm and rural housing; the whole of title V, dealing with college housing which will be largely concerned with providing dormitories; the whole of title IV, which will considerably ease the problems inherent in condemnation proceedings and which I think could be expanded but which I realize is limited by the jurisdiction of our committee; the whole of title III, dealing with urban renewal; and many other sections dealing with the Federal Housing Administration and other parts of the bill—all of these are desirable proposals which could well be incorporated into legislation by this or any other Congress.

Unfortunately, all that I have listed and more besides is dwarfed by the expenditures inherent in section 101 of the bill. The costs of this entire bill are listed by the administration at $6 billion-plus. The cost of section 101 alone, however, which commits the Federal taxpayer to payments of $200 million annually for 40 years, if the plans expressed in the bill are enacted into law and carried out, will amount to $8 billion-plus.

In addition, there is section 104, concerned with public housing in various forms. The cost of this section can and will run to $6 billion. In explanation, the administration figures its cost over only a 4-year period, but since its commitments run for 40 years without the right of recall, I think the Congress must face the problem of 40 years' total cost. These buried billions of dollars to be paid by taxpayers, the majority of them as yet unborn and certainly unfairly committed, will weigh against the desirable elements of the bill itself. Sections 101 and 104, two of the bill's 65 sections, propose benefits for only 1½ percent of the country's families but account for 50 to 60 percent of the bill's cost.

Another factor, not considered in our deliberations, is the rising cost of construction. This in the case of sections 101 and 104 could wipe out much of what is proposed to be built. We are no longer committed to units for the low income and disabled. We are committed to dollars.

If the whole of this bill is restored to economic commonsense I would like to support it. I have hopes of doing so, but only under such conditions.

3 FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO ENABLE CERTAIN PRIVATE
4 HOUSING TO BE AVAILABLE FOR LOWER INCOME FAM-
5 ILIES WHO ARE ELDERLY, HANDICAPPED, DISPLACED,
6 OR OCCUPANTS OF SUBSTANDARD HOUSING

7 SEC. 101. (a) The Housing and Home Finance Ad-
8 ministrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator")
9 is authorized to make, and contract to make, annual pay-
10 ments to a "housing owner" on behalf of "qualified tenants",
11 as those terms are defined herein, in such amounts and under 12 such circumstances as are prescribed in or pursuant to this
13 section. In no case shall a contract provide for such pay-
14 ments with respect to any housing for a period exceeding
15 forty years. The aggregate amount of the contracts to make
16 such payments shall not exceed amounts approved in appro-
17 priation Acts and shall not exceed $50,000,000 per annum
18 prior to July 1, 1966, which maximum dollar amount shall
19 be increased by $50,000,000 on July 1 in each of the years
20 1966, 1967, and 1968.

(b) As used in this section, the term "housing owner" means a private nonprofit corporation or other entity, a limited dividend corporation or other entity, or a cooperative housing corporation, which is a mortgagor under section 221 (d) (3) of the National Housing Act and which, after

1 the enactment of this section, has been approved for mort-
 2 gage insurance thereunder and has been approved for re-
 3 ceiving the benefits of this section: Provided, That no
 4 payments under this section may be made with respect to
 5 any property financed with a mortgage receiving the benefits
 6 of the interest rate provided for in the proviso in section
 7 221 (d) (5) of that Act.

8 (c) As used in this section, the term "qualified tenant"
 9 means any individual or family who has, pursuant to criteria
 10 and procedures established by the Administrator, been de-
 11 termined—

12 (1) to be unable to obtain standard privately owned
 13 housing in the area at a rental which is equal to or less
 14 than one-fourth of the income of such individual or 15 family; and

16 (2) to be one of the following—

17 (A) displaced by governmental action;

18 (B) sixty-two years of age or older (or, in the 19 case of a family, to have a head who is, or whose 20 spouse is, sixty-two years of age or over) ;

21 (C) physically handicapped (or, in the case
 22 of a family, to have a head who is, or whose spouse
 23 is, physically handicapped) ; or

24 (D) occupying substandard housing.

25 (d) The amount of the annual payment with respect to

1 any dwelling unit shall not exceed the amount by which
2 the fair market rental for such unit exceeds one-fourth of the
3 tenant's income as determined by the Administrator pur-
4 suant to procedures and regulations established by him.

5 (e) (1) For purposes of carrying out the provisions of
6 this section, the Administrator shall establish criteria and
7 procedures for determining the eligibility of occupants and
8 rental charges, including criteria and procedures with respect
9 to periodic review of tenant incomes and periodic adjustment
10 of rental charges. The Administrator shall issue, upon the 11 request of a housing owner, certificates as to the following
12 facts concerning the individuals and families applying for
13 admission to, or residing in, dwellings of such owner:

14 (A) the income of the individual or family; and

15 (B) whether the individual or family was displaced
16 by governmental action, is elderly, is physically handi-
17 capped, or is (or was) occupying substandard housing.

18 (2) Procedures adopted by the Administrator hereunder
19 shall provide for recertifications of the incomes of occupants,
20 except the elderly, at intervals of two years (or at shorter
21 intervals in cases where the Administrator may deem it
22 desirable) for the purpose of adjusting rental charges and
23 annual payments on the basis of occupants' incomes, but in 24 no event shall rental charges adjusted under this section for
25 any dwelling exceed the fair market rental of the dwelling.

1 (3) The Administrator may enter into agreements, or
2 authorize housing owners to enter into agreements, with
3 public or private agencies for services required in the selec-
4 tion of qualified tenants, including those who may be ap-
5 proved, on the basis of the probability of future increases
6 in their incomes, as lessees under an option to purchase
7 dwellings or cooperative ownership interests therein, and
8 in the establishment of rentals. The Administrator is
9 authorized (without limiting his authority under any other
10 provision of law) to delegate to any such public or private 11 agency his authority to issue certificates pursuant to this
12 subsection.

13 (f) Section 101 (c) of the Housing Act of 1949 is 14 amended by inserting “ (i) ” after “a mortgage under” in the 15 first proviso and by inserting immediately before the colon at 16 the end of such proviso the following: “, or (ii) section
17 221 (d) (3) of the National Housing Act if payments with 18 respect to the mortgaged property are made or are to be
19 made under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Develop-
20 ment Act of 1965, except that no such mortgage shall be in-
21 sured, and no commitment to insure such a mortgage shall 22 be issued, with respect to property in any community for
23 which a workable program for community improvement
24 was required and in effect at the time a contract for a loan
25 or capital grant was entered into under this title, or a con-

1 tract for annual contributions or capital grants was entered
2 into pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937,
3 unless there is a workable program for community improve-
4 ment which meets the requirements of this subsection in
5 effect in such community at the time of such insurance or
6 commitment”.

7 (g) The Administrator is authorized to make such rules
8 and regulations, to enter into such agreements, and to adopt
9 such procedures as he may deem necessary or desirable to
10 carry out the provisions of this section. Nothing contained
11 in this section shall affect the authority of the Federal Hous-
12 ing Commissioner with respect to any housing assisted under 13 this section and under section 221 (d) (3) of the National
14 Housing Act, including his authority to prescribe occupancy
15 requirements under other provisions of law or to determine
16 the portion of any such housing which may be occupied by
17 qualified tenants.

18 (h) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums
19 as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this sec-
20 tion, including, but not limited to, such sums as may be neces-
21 sary to make annual payments, pay for services provided
22 under (or pursuant to agreements entered into under) sub-
23 section (e), and provide administrative expenses.

24 (i) Section 114 (c) (2) of the Housing Act of 1949 is
25 amended by inserting before the colon at the end of the first

1 proviso the following: “, or a dwelling unit assisted under
2 section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 3 1965”.

4 (j) On or before January 1, 1968, the Administrator
5 shall submit to the Congress a full report of operations under
6 this section, together with his recommendations with respect
7 thereto.

8 EXTENSION OF FHA SECTION 221 PROGRAMS; MODIFICA-
9 TION OF INTEREST RATE; POOLING OF MORTGAGES FOR 10 SALE

11 SEC. 102. (a) The fifth sentence of section 221 (f) of 12 the National Housing Act is amended by striking out “sub-
13 section (d) (2) or (d) (4) after September 30, 1965, or 14 under subsection (d) (3) after September 30, 1965,” and
15 inserting in lieu thereof “this section after October 1, 1969,”.

16 (b) The proviso in section 221 (d) (5) of such Act is 17 amended by striking out “not less than the annual rate of 18 interest determined” and inserting in lieu thereof “not less
19 than the lower of (A) 3 per centum per annum, or (B) the 20 annual rate of interest determined”.

21 (c) Section 302 (c) of such Act is amended by insert-
22 ing before the last sentence thereof the following: “If there
23 shall be included within one or more of the trusts or other
24 agencies created pursuant to the authority of this subsection
25 any mortgages bearing a below-market interest rate and in-

1 sured under section 221 (d) (3) after the date of the enact-
2 ment of the Housing and Urban Development Act of
3 1965, there are authorized to be appropriated from time to
4 time such amounts as may be necessary to reimburse the
5 Association for the amount of the differential (including
6 interest, other costs, and a fair proportion of administrative
7 expense) between (1) the total outlay with respect to out-
8 standing participations or other instruments in an amount not
9 to exceed the dollar amount of such below-market interest
10 rate mortgages, and (2) the total receipts from such
11 mortgages.”

12 LOW-RENT HOUSING IN PRIVATE ACCOMMODATIONS

13 SEC. 103. (a) The United States Housing Act of 1937
14 is amended by redesignating section 23 as section 24, and by
15 adding after section 22 the following new section:

16 “LOW-RENT HOUSING IN PRIVATE ACCOMMODATIONS

17 “SEC. 23. (a) For the purpose of providing a supple-
18 mentary form of low-rent housing which will aid in assuring
19 a decent place to live for every citizen and promote efficiency
20 and economy in the program under this Act by taking full
21 advantage of vacancies or potential vacancies in the private 22 housing market, each public housing agency shall, to the 23 maximum extent consistent with the achievement of the 24 objectives of this Act, provide low-rent housing under this
25 Act in the form of low-rent housing in private accommoda-

1 tions in accordance with this section where such housing in
2 private accommodations can be provided at a cost equal to or
3 less than housing in projects assisted under other provisions
4 of this Act. As used in this section the term 'low-rent hous-
5 ing in private accommodations' means dwelling units in an
6 existing structure, leased from a private owner, which provide
7 decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations and
8 related facilities effectively supplementing the accommoda-
9 tions and facilities in low-rent housing assisted under the
10 other provisions of this Act in a manner calculated to meet
11 the total housing needs of the community in which they are
12 located. As used in this section, the term 'owner' means
13 any person or entity having the legal right to lease or sub-
14 lease property containing one or more dwelling units as
15 described in this section.

16 “(b) Beginning as soon as practicable after the date of 17 the enactment of this section, each public housing agency
18 shall conduct a continuing survey and listing of the available
19 dwelling units within the community or communities under
20 its jurisdiction which provide decent, safe, and sanitary
21 dwelling accommodations and related facilities and are, or
22 may be made, suitable for use as low-rent housing in private
23 accommodations under this section.

24 “(c) Each public housing agency, by notification to 25 the owners of housing listed under subsection (b), or by

1 publication or advertisement, or otherwise, shall from time
2 to time make known to the public in the community or com-
3 munities under its jurisdiction the anticipated need for dwell-
4 ing units in such community or communities to be used as
5 low-rent housing in private accommodations under this sec-
6 tion, inviting the owners of such dwelling units to make
7 available for purposes of this section one or more of such
8 units (not exceeding 10 per centum of the units in any single 9 structure except to the extent that the agency, because of
10 the limited number of units in the structure or for any other
11 reason, determines that such limit should not be applied).
12 The public housing agency shall conduct appropriate inspec-
13 tions of the units offered to be made available in any 14 residential structure by the owner thereof in response to 15 such invitation, and if—

16 “(1) it finds that such units are, or may be made,
17 suitable for use as low-rent housing in private accom-
18 modations within the meaning of subsection (a), and

19 “(2) the rentals to be charged for such units, as 20 negotiated and agreed to by the agency and the owner
21 of the structure in a manner consistent with subsection
22 (d) (2), are within the financial range of families of
23 low income,

24 such agency may approve such units for use as low-rent
25 housing in private accommodations in accordance with (and

1 subject to the applicable limitations contained in) this sec-
2 tion. Each public housing agency shall maintain and keep
3 current a list of units approved by it under this subsection,
4 including such information with respect to each such unit
5 as it may consider necessary or appropriate.

6 “(d) To the extent of contracts for annual contributions
7 entered into by the Authority with a public housing agency
8 under section 10 (e), such agency may enter into contracts
9 with the owners of structures containing dwelling units ap-
10 proved under subsection (c) for the use of such units in 11 accordance with this section. Each such contract with an
12 owner shall provide (with respect to any unit) that—

13 “(1) the selection of tenants for such unit shall be 14 the function of the owner, subject to the provisions of 15 the contract between the Authority and the agency;

16 “(2) the rental and other charges to be received by
17 the owner shall be negotiated and agreed to by the 18 agency and the owner, and the rental and other charges
19 to be paid by the tenant shall be determined in accord-
20 ance with the standards applicable to units in low-rent
21 housing projects assisted under the other provisions of 22 this Act;

23 “(3) the agency shall have the sole right to give
24 notice to vacate, with the owner having the right to

1 make representations to the agency for termination of
2 a tenancy;

3 “(4) maintenance and replacements (including

 20 adequate privately or cooperatively owned system which 21 will be regulated, during the period of such ownership, in 22 a manner acceptable to him with respect to user rates and
 23 charges, capital structure, methods of operation, and rate

5 under the lien of the mortgage (1) 50 per centum of the 6 Commissioner's estimate of the value of such remaining
7 land before development, plus (2) 90 per centum of the 8 actual costs of the development allocated by the Commis-
9 sioner to such remaining land.

8 MUTUALITY FOR MANAGEMENT-TYPE COOPERATIVES

9 SEC. 209. (a) Section 213 of the National Housing Act
10 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
11 subsections:

12 “(k) There is hereby created a Cooperative Manage-
13 ment Housing Insurance Fund (hereinafter referred to as 14 the ‘Management Fund’). The Management Fund shall
15 be used by the Commissioner as a revolving fund for carry-
16 ing out the provisions of this section with respect to 17 mortgages or loans insured, on or after the date of the enact-
18 ment of this subsection, under subsections (a) (1) , (a) (3)
19 (if the project is acquired by a cooperative corporation) ,
20 (i) , and (j) . The Management Fund shall also be used as
21 a revolving fund for mortgages, loans, and commitments
22 transferred to it pursuant to subsection (m) . The Commis-
23 sioner is directed to transfer to the Management Fund from
24 the General Insurance Fund established pursuant to section
25 519 such amount as the Commissioner determines to be

1 necessary and appropriate. General expenses of operation
2 of the Federal Housing Administration relating to mort-
3 gages or loans which are the obligation of the Management
4 Fund may be charged to the Management Fund.

5 “(1) The Commissioner shall establish in the Manage-
6 ment Fund, as of the date of the enactment of this subsec-
7 tion, a General Surplus Account and a Participating Reserve
8 Account. The aggregate net income thereafter received or
9 any net loss thereafter sustained by the Management Fund,
10 in any semiannual period, shall be credited or charged to
11 the General Surplus Account or the Participating Reserve
12 Account or both in such manner and amounts as the Com-
13 missioner may determine to be in accord with sound actu-
14 arial and accounting practice. Upon termination of the 15 insurance obligation of the Management Fund by payment
16 of any mortgage or loan insured under this section, and at
17 such time or times prior to such termination as the Commis-
18 sioner may determine, the Commissioner is authorized to
19 distribute to the mortgagor or borrower a share of the Par-
20 ticipating Reserve Account in such manner and amount as
21 the Commissioner shall determine to be equitable and in ac-
22 cordance with sound actuarial and accounting practice: Pro-
23 vided, That in no event shall the amount of the distributable
24 share exceed the aggregate scheduled annual premiums of the 25 mortgagor or borrower to the year of payment of the share

1 less the total amount of any share or shares previously dis-
2 tributed by the Commissioner to the mortgagor or borrower:
3 And provided further, That in no event may a distributable
4 share be distributed until any funds transferred from the Gen-
5 eral Insurance Fund to the Management Fund pursuant to
6 subsection (k) or (o) have been repaid in full to the General
7 Insurance Fund. No mortgagor, mortgagee, borrower, or
8 lender shall have any vested right in a credit balance in any 9 such account or be subject to any liability arising out of the 10 mutuality of the Management Fund. The determination of 11 the Commissioner as to the amount to be paid by him to any
12 mortgagor or borrower shall be final and conclusive.

13 “(m) The Commissioner is authorized to transfer to the 14 Management Fund commitments for insurance issued under 15 subsections (a) (1), (i), and (j) prior to the date of the 16 enactment of this subsection, and to transfer to the Manage-
17 ment Fund the insurance of any mortgage or loan insured
18 prior to the date of the enactment of this subsection under 19 subsection (a) (1), (a) (3) (if the project is acquired by a
20 cooperative corporation), (i), or (j), but only in cases
21 where the consent of the mortgagee or lender to the transfer
22 is obtained or a request by the mortgagee or lender for the
23 transfer is received by the Commissioner within such period
24 of time after the date of the enactment of this subsection as
25 the Commissioner shall prescribe: Provided, That the insur-

1 ance of any mortgage or loan shall not be transferred under
2 the provisions of this subsection if on the date of the enact-
3 ment of this subsection the mortgage or loan is in default and
4 the mortgagee or lender has notified the Commissioner in
5 writing of its intention to file an insurance claim. Any
6 insurance or commitment not so transferred shall continue to
7 be an obligation of the General Insurance Fund.

8 “(n) Notwithstanding the limitations contained in
9 other provisions of this Act, premium charges for mortgages
10 or loans insured under this section and sections 207, 231, and
11 232 may be payable in debentures issued in connection with 12 mortgages or loans transferred to the Management Fund or 13 in connection with mortgages or loans insured pursuant to
14 commitments transferred to the Management Fund, as pro-
15 vided in subsection (m) of this section.

16 “(o) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act,
17 the Commissioner is authorized to transfer funds between
18 the Cooperative Management Housing Insurance Fund and
19 the General Insurance Fund in such amounts and at such 20 times as he may determine, taking into consideration the
21 requirements of each such Fund, to assist in carrying out
22 effectively the insurance programs for which such Funds
23 were respectively established.”

24 (b) Section 213 of such Act is further amended—

25 (1) by inserting before the period at the end of

1 subsection (a) the following: “: Provided, That as ap-
 2 plied to mortgages the mortgage insurance for which is
 3 the obligation of the Management Fund, the reference
 4 to the General Insurance Fund in section 207 (b) (2)
 5 shall be construed to refer to the Management Fund”;
 6 and

7 (2) by inserting before the period at the end of
 8 subsection (e) the following: “: Provided, That as ap-
 9 plied to mortgages or loans the insurance for which is
 10 the obligation of the Management Fund (1) all refer-

 12 to refer to the Management Fund, and (2) all refer-
 13 ences to section 207 shall be construed to refer to sub-
 14 sections (a) (1), (a) (3) (if the project involved is 15 acquired by a cooperative corporation), (i), and (j)
 16 of this section”.

2 which is paid on or after the date of the enactment of the
3 Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 on a mort-
4 gage or a loan which was insured under any section of this
5 Act either before or after such date. If payment is made in
6 cash, it shall be in an amount equivalent to the face amount
7 of the debentures that would otherwise be issued plus an
8 amount equivalent to the interest which the debentures would 9 have earned, computed to a date to be established pursuant
10 to regulations issued by the Commissioner.

11 “(b) The Commissioner is authorized to borrow from
12 the Treasury from time to time such amounts as the Com-
13 missioner shall determine are necessary to make payments
14 in cash (in lieu of issuing debentures guaranteed by the 15 United States, as provided in this Act) pursuant to the pro-
16 visions of this section. Notes or other obligations issued
17 by the Commissioner in borrowing under this subsection
18 shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary
19 of the Treasury may prescribe. Each sum borrowed pur-
20 suant to this subsection shall bear interest at a rate deter-
21 mined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consid-
22 eration the average market yield on outstanding marketable
23 obligations of the United States of comparable maturities
24 during the month preceding the issuance of such notes or

6 TITLE III—URBAN RENEWAL

7 STUDY OF HOUSING AND BUILDING CODES, ZONING, TAX
8 POLICIES, AND DEVELOPMENT STANDARDS

9 SEC. 301. (a) The Congress finds that the general wel-
10 fare of the Nation requires that local authorities be encour-
11 aged and aided to prevent slums, blight, and sprawl, pre-
12 serve natural beauty, and provide for decent, durable housing
13 so that the goal of a decent home and a suitable living en-
14 vironment for every American family may be realized as soon
15 as feasible. The Congress further finds that there is a need to 16 study housing and building codes, zoning, tax policies, and
17 development standards in order to determine how (1) local 18 property owners and private enterprise can be encouraged to 19 serve as large a part as they can of the total housing and
20 building need, and (2) Federal, State, and local govern-
21 mental assistance can be so directed as to place greater re-
22 liance on local property owners and private enterprise and

1 enable them to serve a greater share of the total housing and
2 building need. The Housing and Home Finance Adminis-
3 trator is therefore directed to study the structure of (1)
4 State and local urban and suburban housing and building
5 laws, standards, codes, and regulations and their impact on
6 housing and building costs, how they can be simplified, im-
7 proved, and enforced, at the local level, and what methods
8 might be adopted to promote more uniform building codes
9 and the acceptance of technical innovations including new
10 building practices and materials; (2) State and local zoning
11 and land use laws, codes, and regulations, to find ways by 12 which States and localities may improve and utilize them in
13 order to obtain further growth and development; and (3)
14 Federal, State, and local tax policies with respect to their
15 effect on land and property cost and on incentives to build
16 housing and make improvements in existing structures.

17 (b) The Administrator shall submit a report based on
18 such study to the President and to the Congress within 18
19 months after the enactment of the Housing and Urban De-
20 velopment Act of 1965 or the appropriation of funds for the 21 study, whichever is later.

22 (c) There are authorized to be appropriated such funds
23 as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

1 Any funds so appropriated shall remain available until
2 expended.

3 GENERAL NEIGHBORHOOD RENEWAL PLANS

4 SEC. 302. Section 102 (d) of the Housing Act of 1949
5 is amended—

6 (1) by striking out the fifth sentence and inserting

9 the attainment of the urban renewal objectives of this title,
10 the Administrator may also make advances of funds (in addi-
11 tion to those authorized above) to local public agencies for 12 the preparation of General Neighborhood Renewal Plans (as 13 herein defined). A General Neighborhood Renewal Plan
14 may be prepared for an area which consists of an urban re-
15 newal area or areas together with any adjoining areas, and 16 which is of such size that the urban renewal activities in the 17 urban renewal area or areas may have to be carried out in 18 stages, consistent with the capacity and resources of the 19 respective local public agency or agencies, over an estimated
20 period of not more than ten years.”; and

21 (2) by striking out clause (1) of the sixth sentence
22 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

23 “(1) in the interest of sound community planning,

1 it is desirable that the urban renewal activities proposed
2 for the area be planned in their entirety;”.

3 INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION FOR CAPITAL GRANTS

4 SEC. 303. (a) The first sentence of section 103 (b) of
5 the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking out
6 “$4,725,000,000” and inserting in lieu thereof “$4,700,-
7 000,000, which amount shall be increased by $675,000,000
8 on the date of the enactment of the Housing and Urban
9 Development Act of 1965, by $725,000,000 on July 1,
10 1966, and by $750,000,000 on July 1 in each of the years
11 1967 and 1968”.

12 (b) The proviso in the first sentence of section 103 (b)
13 of such Act, and the second sentence of section 6 (b) of 14 the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, are repealed.

15 USE OF GRANT OR LOAN FUNDS IN CODE ENFORCEMENT

21 (2) by inserting before the period at the end of the 22 paragraph the following: “, and (B) not less than 10
23 per centum of the aggregate amount of (i) grants
24 authorized to be contracted for under this title by the
25 Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 and sub-

1 sequent Acts, and (ii) loans authorized to be made
2 under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964, shall be
3 available for projects assisted with such grants or loans
4 which involve primarily code enforcement and reha-
5 bilitation”.

6 STRENGTHENED WORKABLE PROGRAM REQUIREMENT

7 SEC. 305. Section 101 of the Housing Act of 1949 is
8 amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
9 subsection:

10 “(e) No loan or grant contract may be entered into
11 by the Administrator for an urban renewal project unless
12 he determines that (A) the workable program for com-
13 munity improvement presented by the locality pursuant to
14 subsection (c) is of sufficient scope and content to furnish a
15 basis for evaluation of the need for the urban renewal project;
16 and (B) such project is in accord with the program.”

17 REHABILITATION LOANS

18 SEC. 306. (a) Section 312 (d) of the Housing Act of
19 1964 is amended to read as follows:

20 “(d) In order to provide moneys for loans in accord-
21 ance with this section, the Administrator is authorized to
22 establish a revolving fund which shall comprise all moneys
23 heretofore or hereafter appropriated pursuant to this
24 section, together with all repayments and other receipts.

1 heretofore or hereafter received in connection with loans
2 made under this section. There are authorized to be
3 appropriated to such revolving fund, in addition to amounts
4 authorized for the purposes of this section prior to the date
5 of the enactment of the Housing and Urban Development
6 Act of 1965, such funds as may be necessary to carry out
7 the purposes of this section. All funds so appropriated shall
8 remain available until expended.”

9 (b) Section 312 of such Act is further amended by
10 adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

11 “(h) No loan shall be made under the authority of this
12 section after October 1, 1969, except pursuant to a contract,
13 commitment, or other obligation entered into pursuant to
14 this section before that date.”

15 LEASE GUARANTIES FOR SMALL-BUSINESS CONCERNS
16 DISPLACED BY URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

17 SEC. 307. (a) Section 7 of the Small Business Act is
18 amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
19 subsection:

20 “(e) (1) The Administration also is empowered, in
21 order to assist small-business concerns which have been dis-
22 placed by urban renewal projects in obtaining leases of 23 property for use in the conduct of their business operations,
24 to insure the owner or lessor of any such property, or the
25 lending institution financing the construction thereof, against

1 losses which such owner, lessor, or institution might sustain
2 as a result of the failure of the small-business concern to
3 perform the lease in accordance with its terms.

4 “(2) No insurance under this subsection shall be granted
5 by the Administration with respect to any lease unless—

6 “(A) the lease is for a period of not more than 7 ten years and contains or is subject to such other terms
8 and conditions as the Administration may require in
9 order to protect the interests of the small-business con-
10 cern and to insure that the lease will assist in carrying
11 out the purpose of this Act; and

12 “(B) the small-business concern is financially sound
13 and efficiently managed, and has provided satisfactory
14 assurances that it will comply with the terms of the lease

17 “(3) There is hereby established an insurance fund for
18 use by the Administration in carrying out this subsection.
19 Each person granted insurance under this subsection shall be
20 required to pay premiums for such insurance, at such times
21 and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Administra-
22 tion, in amounts which shall be fixed by the Administration
23 but which shall not exceed, in the case of any lease, an 24 amount equivalent to 1 per centum of the annual rental (or 25 minimum rental) payable under such lease. Such premiums,

1 together with any other receipts under the insurance program
2 established by this subsection, shall be placed in the insurance
3 fund. Moneys in such fund not needed for the payment of
4 current operating expenses of the insurance program or for
5 the payment of claims arising thereunder may be invested in
6 bonds or other obligations of, or bonds or other obligations
7 guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States;
8 except that moneys made available to provide initial capital
9 for such fund under the sixth sentence of section 4 (c) shall
10 be returned to the revolving fund established by such section,
11 in such amounts and at such times as the Administration
12 determines to be appropriate, whenever the level of such 13 insurance fund (by reason of premiums and receipts from 14 other sources) is sufficiently high to permit the return of 15 such moneys without danger to the solvency of the insurance
16 program under this subsection.

17 “(4) The Administration is authorized and directed
18 to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary
19 to carry out this subsection.”

HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1965

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 425, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 425

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7984) to assist in the provision of housing for low- and moderate-income families, to promote orderly urban development, to improve living environment in urban areas, and to extend and amend laws relating to housing, urban renewal, and community facilities, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed six hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, before yielding to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANDERSON], I would like to announce that by inadvertence on page 2 of the rule the Committee on Public Works was named in lieu of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Therefore, at the conclusion of the debate on this rule, I shall offer the following amendment:

On page 2, line 1, strike out "Committee on Public Works" and insert "Committee on Banking and Currency."

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANDERSON] 30 minutes and myself such time as I shall consume on this rule.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 425 provides for the consideration of H.R. 7984, a bill to assist in the provision of housing for low- and moderate-income families, to promote orderly urban development, to improve living environment in urban areas, and to extend and amend laws relating to housing, urban renewal, and community facilities. The resolution provides an open rule with 6 hours of general debate and waives points of order.

Prompt action on H.R. 7984, the housing and urban development bill, is urgently needed because this bill provides additional authorizations and extensions of authority for most of our programs in this field and a number of those programs have reached or are close to the limits in existing law. These include the entire program of FHA mortgage insurance, urban renewal, public housing, the college dormitory program and farm housing. For years the Congress has sought to achieve as much continuity in these programs as is consistent with congressional control and it is important that we act on this bill without further delay so that our cities, the home build- and home financing industries, our universities and others can make their plans for the future.

This bill is necessarily lengthy and complex because the problems with which it deals are serious and involve the welfare of many millions of our citizens, the future development of our towns and cities, the health of our economy, and a number of specialized problems such as the housing conditions of the elderly. I will give only a brief summary of the bill and leave the more detailed explanation for the extended general debate provided by the rule.

Title I of the bill covers most of the new and existing programs aimed directly at the housing problems of lowest income families. The first section embodies President Johnson's proposal for rent supplements to help poor families to obtain decent housing. In addition to being low income, the families eligible would be those displaced by Government action, the elderly and handicapped, and those now living in slum housing. The housing would be rental and cooperative housing financed under the FHA program and sponsored by private non-profit or limited dividend corporations or cooperatives. The supplement would be the difference between one-fourth of the occupant's income, which he would pay as rent in the normal way, and the full market rental for the unit. The housing would be privately built, privately financed, and privately owned, with the Federal assistance confined only to that margin of aid needed to enable eligible poor families to live there.

Mr. Speaker, this is clearly the most controversial provision of this bill and I know it will be discussed at length during the general debate so I will not go into any further detail at this point.

The second section of the bill would extend for years the increasingly successful FHA program of below-market interest financing for rental and cooperative housing for families of modest incomes. It would also put a ceiling of 3 percent on the interest rate of these loans which would otherwise go to 4 percent on June 30. Sections 103 and 104 would continue the low rent public housing program for 4 years at an annual rate of 60,000 units a year and provide flexibility in the formula so that local housing authorities can use existing privately owned units as well as new construction. The next section of the bill would extend the program of low-interest direct loans for housing for the elderly created in 1959 and limit the interest rate under that program to 3 percent. Finally this title would provide a very promising new authority under the urban renewal program for grants up to $1,500 for lowest income homeowners in urban renewal areas to enable them to bring their homes up to code requirements and thereby avoid eviction. This will be an important step toward achieving the goal we have long sought of encouraging rehabilitation of run-down areas where possible and avoid the personal tragedy of putting people out of their homes and at the same time avoid the public cost of relocation payments and other aid now provided for the displaced.

Title II of the bill covers FHA operations and has three main provisions. First, it would extend all FHA insurance programs for an addition 4 years. Unless we act on this bill FHA will be out of business after September 30 of this year. In addition, title II would authorize a new program of FHA mortgage financing to help finance land acquisition and development for subdivisions. This provision is not as broad as the original administration proposal which would have included the development of entire new communities but that was taken out of the bill by the committee. The third main provision of title II would for the first time permit no downpayment loans for veterans under the FHA insurance programs.

Title III would continue the urban renewal program for 4 years at an annual rate of $700 million. In addition, it would tighten the urban renewal program requirements to minimize relocation hardships and encourage more efficient program operation. It would continue the 3-percent rehabilitation loan program authorized in the Housing Act of 1964 for 4 years, and would provide a new program of lease guarantees for small business concerns displaced by urban renewal projects.

Title IV—compensation of condemnees—would provide a new feature designed to protect displaced homeowners and businesses. It would do this through increased relocation payments and also by assuring owners a prompt and substantial partial payment for their properties pending final court settlement.

Title V would continue the very successful college housing program. It would increase the authorization for college housing loans by $300 million a year over each of the next 4 years and would establish a maximum interest rate of 3 percent.

Title VI of the bill would offer new aid for local community facilities. It would authorize Federal grants to meet one of the most urgent problems facing our towns and cities today, that of adequate and safe water supply. The grants could cover up to 50 percent of the cost of providing basic water and sewer facilities and would be available to towns and cities of all sizes. Another section of this title would provide a new program of grants covering two-thirds of the cost of needed community centers to serve the social and recreational needs of the poorer sections of our cities, and the bill provides a priority for projects undertaken in connection with the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

Title VII would increase the mortgage purchasing authority of the Federal National Mortgage Association special assistance program by a total of $1.6 billion over the next 4 years. This money is needed to continue the FHA below-market interest rate program for low and moderate income families.

Title VIII of the bill would amend the open space land program to liberalize the grants in existing law and to make the aid available in built-up areas. It would also provide assistance to towns and cities which increase their efforts in the field of urban beautification.

Title IX would extend our housing programs in rural areas for 4 years and would add an insured home loan program to make liberal financing available in very small towns and farm areas which cannot be fully served by regular private mortgage lenders.

The last title of the bill, title X, includes a number of miscellaneous provisions, the most important of which are 4-year extensions of the existing urban planning grant program and the public works planning advance program.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before any delay in acting on this bill would be damaging to our housing programs. I believe the rule is noncontroversial; it had bipartisan support in the hearings before our committee, even from those who are critical of some of the provisions in the bill. I urge the House to approve it.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I gladly yield to my distinguished friend from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman has given us quite a rundown on the bill, but I do not believe he stated why the rule provides for waiving point of order. Could the gentleman tell us why the rule would waive points of order?

Mr. PEPPER. That matter came up in the Rules Committee. Those who presented the application for the rule to the committee felt that technical questions might arise which would make it appropriate to provide in the rule for the waiver of points of order.

In a complex bill like this, which affects many provisions of existing law and has many ramifications, it was felt that full and fair consideration of the bill and the whole subject matter thereof by the House would require or make desirable the provision in the rule for waiving points of order, which, as the able gentleman knows, is not an unusual provision for a rule to contain. However, the able gentleman also knows 6 hours of debate are allowed in this rule, and it is an open rule. Therefore, the House will have ample opportunity for thorough debate on the measure.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the yield further?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes. I yield to the able gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. I suppose there are technical questions concerning almost any bill brought on the floor of the House. I still await some kind of bill of particulars as to why all points of order were waived or will be waived by the adoption of this rule. Has it just become fashionable for the Committee on Rules to bring out rules waiving all points of order? Is that the story?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the able gentleman that when the Committee on Rules is requested to provide in the rule for the waiving of points of order, it always gives pause to the committee in the consideration of the matter. The committee never does it without deliberating on it and raising the very question that the able gentleman raised as to whether or not it is desirable for the rule to provide for waiver of points or order. I will say, as Mr. Justice Holmes said, "Everything from the 12 tables down to the present is a matter of degree." In this particular case the Rules Committee thought the provision for the waiver of points or order was appropriate to the subject matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

(Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, to continue just for a moment or two the colloquy which has just taken place between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Gross] and my distinguished colleague from the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], I would share with the gentleman from Iowa the feeling that there is an unfortunate growing tendency on the part of those who appear before the Committee on Rules to ask for waivers of points of order almost as a matter of course, whether or not it can really be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the committee that this is truly necessary. I think the gentleman performed a service here today in pointing out that we ought to be prepared, unless there is very good cause shown to the contrary, to be willing to abide by the rules of the House and not to resort to this frequent practice of the waiving of points of order.

Mr. Speaker, Members of the House will recall that last year we had before this body a bill which was referred to as a barebones housing bill. I am sure no one in this Chamber today, least of all the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who have studied this legislation, would suggest that we are today considering anything in the nature of a barebones legislative package. This is far from that. I have not been able to determine, even after several days of hearings in the Committee on Rules, how much this is going to cost the taxpayers. Some people have put a price tag of $6 billion on it. Someone else said $7 billion. There are those who are going to point out during general debate, I am sure, that under one section alone, section 101, the eventual cost to the taxpayers could be $8 billion. There are others who will point out, I think, under section 104, the public housing section, of this bill, the eventual cost may run to $7 billion.

Be that as it may, I think the point can be amply substantiated that this is a multibillion-dollar bill. Not only is it gigantic in cost, but it is a bill that is revolutionary in its philosophy which it espouses and the concepts it seeks to introduce into the field of housing legislation.

I do not know how many Members of the House, but maybe all of them, got the same little do-it-yourself kit that I got when this session of Congress opened in January, which was kindly provided to us from the Housing and Home Finance Agency, telling about all of the programs they had. I brought just a few, not all, of the pamphlets that they were thoughtful enough to include in this little packet: "FHA Mortgage Insurance for Urban Renewal," "FHA Home Mortgage Insurance," "Housing Loans for Major Home Improvements," "FHA's Rental Housing Program," "FHA and the Homebuying Servicemen," "FHA Mortgage Association for Condominiums," "FHA Assistance for Home Trade-ins," "Mortgage Insurance for Rental and Cooperative Housing for Families of Low and Moderate Income," "Mortgage Insurance on Housing for the Elderly," and "FHA Financing for Home Purchases and Home Improvements."

I could go on and on and on with a list of problems that already exist in HHFA. And yet today, as the gentleman from Florida has pointed out, we are faced not only with extending for 4 years many of the well-known and familiar programs of that agency but starting some brandnew, very expensive programs as well.

This, of course, is a pretty good illustration of the legislative technique that has been used by this administration consistently in this session of Congress. It is the omnibus-bill tactic. It is the package approach. All the time they tell us, why, of course, all of these programs are functioning beautifully, they are doing fine for the elderly and for the servicemen and for rental housing and for all of these diverse groups. But despite all of the praise that is heaped on these programs, it is not quite enough. We have got to start something that is a little bit better, a little bit different and, of course, we are going to start very modestly, as we do in this rental supplement program with only $50 million a year authorization, but next year inexorably as the hand of time moves, the program is going to go up to $100 million, then $150 million, then $200 million.

And, as I think the gentleman from Michigan and others on the Committee on Banking and Currency can point out during the time we will have on general debate, this is just the beginning of a program that could literally lead to the subsidization of housing for million and millions of American families.

According to the testimony of Mr. Ed Mendenhall, representing the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the administration's subsidy program for America's middle class will eventually include all families whose housing costs exceed 20 percent of the family income. According to the 1960 census figures, this would include at least 40 percent of our Nation's population.

In Mr. Mendenhall's words:

The rent supplement program by reaching into the income levels even in excess of the median income of all families constitutes a gross misrepresentation of the capabilities of the American family to acquire adequate shelter through its own resources.

The 1960 census figures also tell us that 72 percent of the families who earn less than $4,000 a year, and 92 percent of families earning between $4,000 and $8,000 annually live in adequate housing. The administration's bill seems to be based on the mistaken premise that everyone, regardless of income and present conditions, is entitled to a new dwelling unit. The absurdity of such an undertaking is obvious. In the words of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REUSS]:

We'll have rent supplements for everybody who does not live on Park Avenue.

I am not going to take the time to go through, as my friend from Florida has done in excellent fashion, all of the various authorizations that are contained in this bill that would be continued on new programs. But it reminds me pretty much of that old expression—something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue.

I think it is the taxpayers who are going to be singing the blues when they get to examining all of the provisions that are to be found in this bill. There is one that said it is going to promote the goals of the Great Society and as the majority report makes clear in connection with one of the new programs to finance the construction of community recreation and neighborhood centers, this bill is part of the poverty program; to carry out the poverty program.

We will have a bill, I can remind you, and perhaps I need not, another bill of close to $2 billion to carry out the poverty program a little bit later this week.

Over the weekend I noticed a speech that was delivered by a Mr. Donald Henderson who is the director of research, I believe, for the united planning organization, the group which coordinates the antipoverty program in the District of Columbia. I mention this because of the reference in the majority report to the fact that this bill is clearly necessary to implement the poverty program.

In his speech as reported, he is supposed to have said that this is necessary to coordinate the poverty program in the District of Columbia. He said that the war on poverty should be aimed at bringing about fundamental changes in the American social structure.

And one of the things that he went on to stress as being necessary to produce those changes is, "facing the inevitability of the welfare state."

Believe me, we not only face, we accept in this bill the inevitability of the introduction of the welfare state. This is nothing short of a Brannan plan for city dwellers, a Brannan plan where there will be compensatory payments to allow the renter to upgrade his housing without any effort on his part but at the expense of the American taxpayer.

No longer is the administration content to single out the lower class as the prime target in the war on poverty. Now it is supposedly a war crime to belong to the lower middle class. We have been led to believe that the war on poverty is an attempt to help the poor help themselves. This is a most commendable goal. Yet the reasoning behind the rent subsidy plan is a curious contradiction to this goal. The rent subsidy plan would extend Federal assistance to those who have managed to pull themselves up by their bootstraps and stand on their own feet. It provides for additional Federal aid where it is not really needed. In short, it is a crutch that is being offered to those who have just learned to walk. Its only possible effect will be to cripple for life those who have just overcome a major handicap. It does not offer a helping hand; it only imposes a lifelong brace.

Allow me to illustrate this point. A family in the $3,000-a-year income bracket, that's $250 a month, would pay $62.50 a month on a $100 apartment under the rent subsidy plan. The Government would pay the difference between 25 percent of the family's income and the cost of the apartment, or $37.50 a month. Should that family's income be raised to $300 a month, its own rent payment would be upped to $75 and the Government subsidy would drop to $25.

And if the family's income were raised to $400 a month, it would be forced to pay all of the rent. In other words, the family has no incentive to increase its income as long as it can live in the same accommodations earning $250 a month as it could earn $400.

Or if the family wished, it could move into a $200-a-month apartment and still receive a Government subsidy since the law only specifies that the standard housing should be suitable to the tenant's needs and desires as determined by the housing administrator.

It is called by some a social experiment. Well, I wonder if there is a single Member listening to me in this Chamber who thinks that this experiment, once started, will ever end.

Mr. Speaker, we have had public housing, I would remind you, since 1937. If my memory serves me correctly, we still have only about 540,000 public housing units, costing about $191 million, in fiscal 1964.

Under this proposal, in just 4 short years, not 25 years, you are going to have 500,000 subsidized units costing as I have said previously $200 million a year at least.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of those never-ending experiments that once begun is certainly not going to be discontinued.

You know, it was Arthur Krock, I thing, who commented in an article which I read not long ago on this program which appeared in the New York Times on May 26, as follows, and I quote:

The rent supplement plan is merely the latest, though the most extreme, expression of the political philosophy which would create an egalitarian socioeconomy, irrespective of individual merit, with subsidies financed by the ambitious, the industrious, and the worthy, the real issue is whether the Federal Union is to undergo its greatest transformation thus far into a collectivist state.

Those, Mr. Speaker, were the words of Arthur Krock.

So, Mr. Speaker, I beg the Members of this body to listen during the 2 or 3 days that we will be engaged in the debate on this bill because the decision you make on this section is going to have one of the most far-reaching effects that Members of this Congress have been asked to enact to date.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HALL. I appreciate the gentleman's comment and the beautiful exposition of some of the objections to this rule. I certainly would like to associate myself with the comments of the gentleman concerning the prior colloquy with the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] who brings this rule to the floor of the House today.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to see why we should waive all points of order on these bills and on these rules.

I wonder if the gentleman from Illinois could go into that a little further to say that it is more appropriate to waive points of order in the opinion of the majority of the Committee on Rules on any given legislation without specifying earlier or why, in a bill of particulars, points of order are waived, is the difference between tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee.

I would urge the gentleman for the benefit of the Members of the House to explain that further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALBERT). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the time to go into this in detail but there are others who have requested to be heard under the rule and I must conclude my remarks. But, perhaps, suffice it to say, as the gentleman said earlier, it is simply a question of the committee chairman and those who come before the Committee on Rules just getting into the habit of asking on almost everything and on almost each and every occasion for a rule waiving points of order. I have not been satisfied on several occasions with the explanations that have been given as to why this is necessary. Yet that is the kind of rule that has been granted, according to the will of the majority of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield further to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HALL. There are many of us working night and day on the rules of the Congress under Senate Concurrent Resolution 2. Should not the rules as to the procedures of each body interrelate between the two bodies and not allow things that are nongermane to be considered or to waive points of order that might otherwise, under existing rules of the House, be objected to by Members of the House?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I certainly agree with the gentleman's view and I would like to have the gentleman's committee address itself to that very problem during the course of its hearings.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I should like to commend the gentleman for the excellent statement he has made in connection with this bill and say again that I am opposed to this rule for the reason that it waives points of order. I hope, therefore, the rule will be defeated.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I want to say just one thing before I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. A large part of the hearings which were held in the Committee on Rules, much of the time spent thereon, was stimulated because of the issuance of what is depicted as a committee print, a document called "Corrections of Misleading and False Statements Concerning Rent Supplement Program Made in Minority Report on the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965."

Mr. Speaker, it developed in the hearings that were held in the committee that this was a document—and this is my impression of the hearings—which was prepared by the Housing and Home Finance Agency and then issued under the imprimatur of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. Speaker, I think this represents a mighty poor procedure for any committee of this House to indulge in such a travesty on the Members of the Congress and the House itself.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HARVEY].

(Mr. HARVEY of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HARVEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss the open rule granting 6 hours' debate on H.R. 7984, the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965. I certainly want to emphasize that I do not approve of a rule waiving points of order.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I want to make my own position clear. I believe that by and large, both urban renewal and public housing, which are dealt with in this bill, have made significant contributions to our Nation's welfare. I may occasionally have differences insofar as the amount of these programs is concerned, or with the manner in which they are being administered, but I support the concept of both programs and do not question the need or necessity. I say that as a former mayor in a Michigan city of 100,000 population, who has worked with the problems of blighted downtown areas, slums, and the housing of both low-income and minority groups.

But, Mr. Speaker, one issue in this bill overshadows all the rest. I refer, of course, to section 101, the proposal to begin a massive $8 billion program of rent supplements to middle-income families. If this rent supplement program is still in the bill when we come to final passage, I intend to vote against the bill. If it is eliminated, as I hope, I will vote for the bill—and it is just that simple.

It is a pity that this housing bill has come to be characterized by this rent supplement program. I say that because, by and large, with the exception of the rent supplement section, the remainder of the bill represents a bipartisan effort. I have been proud of the contributions from our minority Members, for more than 20 major Republican proposals have found their way into this legislation. Look, for example, at the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WIDNALL], found on page 44—in section 211—entitled "FHA Mortgage Financing for Veterans." It is a fact that the present VA home loan program is being phased out of existence. This section, suggested by Mr. WIDNALL, will insure that every veteran who has not used up his eligibility will be entitled to secure an FHA "no downpayment" mortgage on homes costing up to $20,000 and with only 5 percent down on homes up to $30,000.

We hear loud noises about the need for rent supplements in order to boost the housing construction industry. Mr. Speaker, with the passage of this section of the bill, granting VA-type mortgage insurance to all veterans, we will be creating far more potential demand for new housing construction than could ever be created by rent supplements. More important, in the process of doing so, we will be correcting a great wrong to those tens of thousands of cold war GI's who have never been made eligible for the VA housing program. We will be serving notice to our boys in Vietnam and Santo Domingo that the 89th Congress has not turned its back on their future needs.

It would be an oversight at this point if I did not give credit to the distinguished chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARRETT], who readily recognized and accepted this worthy provision.

Look also at page 58, for the minority had added to this measure a bill of rights for those poor unfortunate souls whose businesses and homes happen to stand in the way of a Federal bulldozer. I refer, of course, to title IV of the bill which establishes a uniform land acquisition procedure. Too often in the past the byproduct of urban programs has been the tragic loss of homes and businesses and long, drawn-out legal battles with city hall in a hopeless attempt by the landowner to receive a fair price for the property desired for urban renewal. Title IV was inspired by the minority and it corrects this evil.

Under this title reasonable efforts to negotiate are required. Further, if agreement cannot be reached, the landowner is entitled to receive 75 percent of the most recent fair price before eminent domain proceedings begin.

Mr. Speaker, I think my remarks make it abundantly clear that in many respects this is a bipartisan bill. Again, I commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARRETT], chairman of our subcommittee, for the friendly spirit of cooperation he displayed in accepting many of these fine features. It is, therefore, unfortunate that we find ourselves this afternoon about to consider one of the most bitterly debated pieces of legislation to come before Congress in several years. As the dean of Washington correspondents, Mr. Arthur Krock, said recently in the New York Times:

Of all the legislation proposed by President Johnson, none has reached a more basic issue of political philosophy than section 101 of the housing bill.

It is fair to ask: How did this rent supplement plan come about? It came about because the administration recommended phasing out section 221(d)(3), below-market-interest-rate program. But the committee decided not to do this and has tacked the rent supplement program into the below-market-interest-rate program.

It is fair to ask also: Who is the rent supplement program intended to benefit? It is intended to benefit—not the low income group—but the moderate group. Show me just one instance where "low income" appears in the language of section 101. If you do not believe me, then ask yourself why Dr. Weaver, the Housing Administrator, told a Pittsburgh audience just 2 days after this bill was reported out, "one would have to have a heart of gold and a head of lead" to think that low income families would benefit from rent supplements. Dr. Weaver told the Senate committee virtually the same thing. Look at our minority views on page 183. In no uncertain terms, the Housing Administrator made clear that this plan is not intended for the low income groups.

Mr. Speaker, no other piece of legislation before us this year has attained such a universal consensus—a consensus of bitter criticism.

No other piece of legislation has received so little vocal support from the President. He has been eloquent by what he has failed to say.

No other piece of legislation is so regressive in its social impact, for in no other legislation do we authorize the expenditure of so much to help those who truly need it so little.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, nowhere in section 101 do the words "low income" appear. In fact, nowhere in section 101 do any limits whatsoever appear. The intent is clearly spelled out in line 3 of page 4, where it says, "as deemed by the Administrator pursuant to procedures and regulations established by him." This sentence summarizes the whole of section 101.

I want to compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARRETT] again for being so candid in his description of the lack of support for this program. It was not a member of the minority, but our distinguished chairman himself, who said the following, and I quote:

Frankly, I have been somewhat surprised at some of the public interest groups who have either directly opposed the rent supplement program, or have damned it with faint praise.

This, then, is the brief history of rent supplements. The only support for this program comes from those who would reap a "one-shot profit" from the construction of 500,000 apartment units, and if one Washington special interest group constitutes a consensus, we are traveling down a dangerous road indeed.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why this year's housing bill cannot achieve a ringing vote of confidence from both sides of the aisle as it has in years past. The rent supplement program set forth in section 101 is the only thing that stands in the way of such broad support.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the able gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss the provision about waiving points of order. This question came up in the Rules Committee.

It is traditional, in respect to housing bills, for points of order to be waived.

Our Committee on Banking and Currency has much of which to be proud. The Banking and Currency Committee has never asked for a closed rule. We never have, not even once. Even during World War II, when there were unpopular price controls and wage control bills, involving 8 million prices and wages—8 million—notwithstanding that, we never asked for a closed rule. We came to the floor of the House on an open rule, and any Member could offer any amendment concerning any of those 8 million prices or wages.

We had some difficult times then. We had some hard work to do. But we never asked for a closed rule.

In this case I do not believe we should be criticized or censured because we have asked to continue the traditional policy in respect to a housing bill. There are many things which cannot be anticipated, which cannot be foreseen, in respect to this bill. The Committee on Rules has always granted a rule to waive points of order on this subject.

Does that inconvenience the House? Does that inconvenience the membership? Not at all. A majority can always work its will. So when anyone objects to waiving points of order he is in effect saying, "We want a very small minority to pick up anything to make a point of order on—just one thing—and perhaps override the will of the whole House by making the point of order."

I believe the democratic way, as well as the traditional way, has been that if anything should be discussed in respect to the bill, which is considered objectionable, any Member can offer a motion to strike it out and then a majority of the Members present can strike it out.

In fact, we are perpetuating and recognizing the majority rule when we waive points of order on a bill. That is exactly what we are doing here.

The original bill which was introduced was 80 pages long. The clean bill we are now considering is 105 pages long, or 25 pages more.

The committee, in considering this bill—and particularly the subcommittee which did the work on the bill, under the chairmanship of the distinguished and honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARRETT]—wanted to make sure that everything was included in the right way.

In rewriting a bill that is as huge as this bill is, no one can anticipate and foresee the possibility of something in the bill that might be subject to a point of order. So you do not lose your rights. You just lose the right of one person getting up and saying, "I will make a point of order." It may be something that is vital and very necessary for the welfare of the country. Notwithstanding that, he could overrule the sentiment of the entire House with just one point of order.

So it occurs to me it is a very fine thing for this committee and a very fine record for our committee, never having asked for a gag rule and never having asked for a closed rule and having handled some of the most intricate and some of the most unpopular bills that have ever been in the Congress of the United States. What we are asking for is a procedure so as not to deny the majority the right to pass on it, no, because a majority always works its way and works its will in this body.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALBERT). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. YOUNGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. YOUNGER. The gentleman from Texas makes a very good argument, it is true, but my experience this year is that the majority is unwilling to accept any kind of an amendment. We had an example the other day about the elimination of 16 elevator operators for the automatic elevators in the Rayburn Building. Even this small amendment would not be passed. Now the elevator service has been slowed down materially.

Mr. PATMAN. Let us stay on the housing bill. Who are the majority? It is not necessarily a party that represents the majority. I do not know of any major bill that does not receive support and opposition from both political parties. That is all right. So we do not know who the majority is always. However, one thing is sure. The majority always works its way and its will. I have never known a major law to become a law or a major bill to pass both House of Congress involving as much as this housing bill involves which did not represent a compromise of view or a sacrifice of opinion on the part of practically every Member of the House and of the other body. We cannot always have our way. We cannot have everything as we want it. We have to give and we have to take. We have to compromise. That is legislation. Without compromise there can be no legislation. If every Member were adamant and said we must have it this way or not at all, we would not have any kind of a bill ever pass the House.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HALL. It would seem to me that the gentleman's exposition "doth protest too much," for, if we had from the gentleman who is the author of the bill but one or two items which he is trying to protect by the waiver of all points of order, I think perhaps the minority, whose rights we strive to protect, as he adamantly declaims for the overwhelming power of the majority, we would probably be assuaged in our feelings and would resume our seats. It is of no avail, I think, to proclaim the process of democracy and the rule of the majority, simultaneously, while doing away with Jefferson's own rules which involve the protection of the rights of the minority, including germaneness, points of order, and other very valuable and proved rules through the decades of this Congress history. They are points that might well be made. I would very much like to hear item No. 1 of what is being protected in this bill consisting of 11 titles and many pages.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. I would like to answer the gentleman. Maybe the gentleman can see farther down the road, around the curve and over the hill, than we can see. We do not know of any provision in this bill that is subject to a point of order. If the gentleman knows of one, I wish he would tell it to us now.

Mr. HALL. If the gentleman will yield further, if he knows of none, could he not use his overpowering majority to have his point made if an objection is raised?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes, the majority could.

Mr. HALL. Absolutely. Then, why do you object so strenuously to a simple question about a waiver of points of order?

Mr. PATMAN. Because we cannot anticipate all that is in a 105-page bill every time. We cannot foresee; we cannot see down the road far enough.

Now, I have great respect for the gentleman, but I feel he ought to name something in this bill that he would move to strike out on a point of order. I do not know of anything. This rule is traditional on a 105-page bill. We cannot anticipate everything that might come up. Therefore this is for the purpose of permitting the majority to carry out its will. That is all we are doing.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I would say that he is building mightily on a frail frame if, indeed, he does not have more faith in the legislative counseling service, or what he himself has drafted in this bill. It is not incumbent upon us to name in advance the weak points, the nongermane elements of this bill; we have had less than 2 days in which to study this bill. It is incumbent upon the gentleman, when he asks the Committee on Rules to offer a resolution on the bill waiving all points of order, to state why he has done so.

Mr. PATMAN. I am proud of my position, because I am on the side of majority rule. The gentleman is on the side of one-person rule.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PEPPER

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, to correct an inadvertence in the resolution, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PEPPER: On page 2, line 1, strike out "Committee on Public Works" and insert "Committee on Banking and Currency".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 230, nays 115, not voting 89, as follows:

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7984) to assist in the provision of housing for low- and moderate-income families, to promote orderly urban development, to improve living environment in urban areas, and to extend and amend laws relating to housing, urban renewal, and community facilities.

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 7984, with Mr. Flood in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I consider it a privilege, as chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, to lay before this body a bill of such major importance to our people and our Nation as the housing and urban development bill of 1965.

This legislation is a landmark bill that ranks in scope and significance with the great Housing Acts of 1949, 1955, and 1961. It represents another great step forward toward the goal set by Congress in 1949 of a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family.

This is a bill very close to my long-standing interests as a legislator. For the past 20 years or more, much of my legislative effort has centered on the development of better housing and community life. At the end of the war I participated in setting up the emergency operation to restore our housing economy to a peacetime operation. I authored the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act to provide housing for our returning veterans. I have supported and participated in every progressive housing and urban bill enacted since that time.

I now tender this legislation confident that it embodies the best thinking and the most considered set of measures for our day and time that the experience and dedication of the members of your committee, from both parties, can produce.

This is truly a committee bill, worked out by the subcommittee and fully reviewed by our full committee. It is also truly a bipartisan bill, incorporating proposals developed by members of both parties and adopted by the nearly unanimous consensus of the members of the Housing Subcommittee.

I want to acknowledge the able work of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Congressman WILLIAM A. BARRETT, as head of this subcommittee, in shaping this legislation.

And I want to express my appreciation for the important contributions and the constructive cooperation of the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey, Congressman WILLIAM B. WIDNALL.

The original bill introduced to carry out the President's broad-ranging proposals for housing and community assistance has been thoroughly considered. In many cases these proposals have been reshaped and augmented by the committee membership of both parties. The resulting bill carries out all the essentials of the President's message, and improves and expands upon them.

Virtually all the basic programs for housing and urban development established over the years have come before us for review and decision as to their future.

This legislation, therefore, provides over the next 4 years authority for the mortgage insurance programs of the FHA, the college housing loan program, the urban renewal and urban planning assistance programs, the farm housing programs, the public housing program on an enlarged basis, the new rehabilitation loans program authorized in 1964, and the programs for public works planning, open space, and the mortgage purchase operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association.

I feel that I need not argue the case for programs that the Congress has time after time affirmed, except to point out that this legislation is necessary for their continuance.

But this bill is concerned with more than what we have been doing. It is geared also to other things that need to be done to meet the persistent and changing needs of our housing and community problems today. To this end it contains a number of major new proposals and approaches.

The bill before us today would establish a new program of matching grants to local public bodies and agencies to finance construction of basic water and sewer facilities. The grants authorized by the bill could also be made for projects to expand, enlarge, or improve existing water and sewer systems and would be available to large and small communities throughout the country.

Mr. Chairman, one of the most pressing problems facing many American communities today is the need to provide adequate water and sewer facilities. This has been testified to repeatedly in hearings held by our committee in recent years.

Many small communities are caught in a vicious circle. They cannot attract industry and provide jobs for their young people because they cannot offer adequate water and sewer facilities—and they lack the financial ability to construct adequate water and sewer facilities because without industry they have no economic base. Even the larger cities already find that their water and sewer facilities are no longer adequate to meet the increased demands for water and sewer services of their existing population—and we know that these larger cities will absorb much of the population growth that will take place in this Nation in the next 25 years.

All of the members of this body know that our towns and cities are hard pressed. Sources of tax revenue are under heavy strain, and individual government units are at a disadvantage in imposing additional tax burdens because this often has the effect of driving industry and employment to other locations. I believe that the new matching grant program for water and sewers provided by the bill will be a very great help to our communities and permit them to make a significant start toward working off the great backlog of needed water and sewer facilities.

Another new program contained in the bill would authorize FHA to insure mortgage loans for developing residential building sites which will be part of good neighborhoods adequately served by schools and other community facilities. There is a pressing need to make the well-established FHA credit assistance available to enable builders to develop land more efficiently and at lower cost. The rising cost of land has been one of the principal causes of the increased prices of new homes.

Many of the Members of this body will recall that a similar provision was included in the Housing Act of 1961. But, unfortunately, in that year we were unable to persuade the conferees to include this provision in the housing bill enacted. Over the last 4 years the problem has become more acute, and the need for this new program of FHA mortgage insurance for land development is now widely recognized.

Another new program authorized by the bill would provide Federal assistance for the acquisition of parks and playgrounds and for the beautification and improvement of these and other public areas. This program would, at moderate cost, enable local communities to increase their activities to improve our public places.

The deterioration of the appearance and spirit of our countryside and our cities has become a problem of national concern. I believe this new program will help spark the beginning of a drive to improve the beauty and quality of the physical environment of our Nation's communities.

The bill also contains a provision which would establish a new program of liberal FHA mortgage insurance to serve our veterans. This new program would help our young veterans, who have not had the benefit of the GI home loan program, to acquire good housing, and would stimulate construction of additional new housing.

A new program contained in this bill would authorize grants of up to $1,500 to very low income homeowners in urban renewal areas to enable them to repair and rehabilitate their homes to bring them up to standards required in the community by housing or building codes or the urban renewal plan for the area.

Generally, these grants will be made to elderly homeowners in urban renewal areas whose incomes are very low and who cannot afford the cost of repairs that are required to be made to their homes. Without the grants authorized by this new program, the homes of these people would often have to be acquired by a local public agency and these homeowners displaced and faced to seek some other place to live.

The most discussed and far reaching of the new programs authorized by this bill is the program of rent supplements. The rent supplement program will make it possible for low- and moderate-income families to be able to afford standard housing. It will harness the energies and abilities of the American free enterprise system. By increasing the number of families that can afford standard housing, it will enable American private enterprise to construct and finance, over the next 4 years, approximately 500,000 dwelling units of modest design which will serve low- and moderate-income families who cannot now afford decent housing.

Others will discuss the rent supplement program in more detail, but I would like to comment on several aspects of it.

As submitted to the Congress, the rent supplement program was not available to families with incomes sufficiently low to enable them to qualify for admission to public housing projects. It was limited to families whose incomes were too high to enable them to qualify for admission to public housing, but still too low to enable them to acquire standard private housing in their communities.

The committee felt that it was inequitable to deny the benefits of this rent supplement program to families just because their incomes were sufficiently low to enable them to qualify for admission to public housing. Many communities still do not have public housing programs in operation. And even in those communities which have public housing programs, there are long waiting lists for admission to public housing units. The committee was informed that there are 500,000 families on waiting lists. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that the public housing program could not absorb a larger number of additional public housing units than the 60,000 a year authorized by this bill. In these circumstances the committee believed that the rent supplement program ought to be available to these people.

The committee also considerably reduced the amount of income a family may have and still be eligible to have a rent supplement payment made on its behalf.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], the distinguished Speaker of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. With reference to the rent supplement program as contained in the pending bill, it is my understanding that this section of the bill is for the purpose of enabling private housing to be available for certain low-income families and the payment of these rent supplements in such cases would be made by the administrator under contracts with owners of such housing and therefore this housing would be privately financed and is strictly in the field of private business.

Mr. PATMAN. It is strictly a private enterprise project. I thank the distinguished Speaker.

This was done by limiting rent supplements to families who cannot obtain standard housing with 25 percent of their monthly income rather than 20 percent as proposed to the Congress.

Let me give you an example of the effect of the committee amendment to the proposal.

Assume a community in which the lowest monthly rental at which a family can obtain a standard two-bedroom unit is $80.

Under the program, as submitted to the Congress, a three- to four-person family in this community would have been eligible for a rent supplement if it was elderly, displaced or handicapped, or living in substandard housing and had a monthly income of less than $400 or an annual income of less than $4,800. That is, if it could not pay the $80 a month in rent with 20 percent of its monthly income.

Under the committee amendment such a three- to four-person family in this community would be eligible for a rent supplement only if its income was less than $320 a month or $3,840 annually. That is, if it could not pay the $80 a month in rent with 25 percent of its monthly income.

The effect of this committee amendment is to lower by 20 percent the income levels of families who may have rent supplements paid on their behalf.

I believe that this amendment will assure that rent supplement payments are paid only on behalf of families who need them. It will also assure that families receiving rent supplement payments are paying as much as they can toward the cost of the standard housing the rent supplement program will provide.

It was claimed before our subcommittee by one spokesman that public housing would cost less than rent supplements. That is not an accurate reading of the facts, and I think that erroneous impression should be dispelled. The figures supporting that statement left many things out of account.

They took no account of the income and property tax exemption, which is also a part of the public cost of public housing. They were based on annual subsidies covering public housing built over many past years when costs were lower—not on today's costs. They did not take into account the fact that under this bill, as we have revised it, the tenant under rent supplements would pay 25 percent of his income for rent compared to less than 20 percent in public housing.

They did not take into account the fact that land and construction costs for private housing under the rent supplement program would be less than for public housing. This housing would have a much wider range of selection of sites, including outlying areas, would involve no substantial clearance in most cases, and while meeting FHA mortgage requirements, would not have to meet some of the special construction problems in public housing projects.

Compared to a current level of about $58 a month per unit for annual subsidies in public housing, it is estimated that the average subsidy cost under rent supplements would run about $40 a month per unit.

Some who have fought and obstructed the public housing program for 30 years now pretend to fear the rent supplement program will hurt public housing. This is not true.

Now, when our attention is being focused, perhaps more closely than ever, on the housing needs for low-income families, I am happy to see that this bill would provide for public housing a renewed commitment from the Congress, with new authorization and new programs.

The bill would authorize an additional 60,000 units a year for the next 4 years—240,000 units in all. This would be one of the largest authorizations for public housing in the history of that program.

New approaches authorized in the bill would give the public housing program greater flexibility in meeting the housing needs of low-income families. These new approaches will permit public housing to purchase, or purchase and rehabilitate, existing units, and lease privately owned units for use under the public housing program. In many communities, where such units are available, local housing authorities would be able to obtain housing units more quickly and more economically than by building new projects.

These new approaches represent a major step forward in the effort to house low-income families.

Furthermore, the bill would eliminate the requirement that there be a 20-percent gap between the upper rental limits for admission to low-rent housing projects and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing a substantial supply of standard housing. This gap has already been eliminated with respect to displaced families and the elderly. The across-the-board removal of this requirement, as provided in the bill, will enable the public housing program to expand its operations and serve an even larger number of low-income families.

In short, I believe that the public housing provisions of the bill reflect the proven value of the program and would serve not only to continue, but substantially broaden the program and enable it even more successfully to fulfill its traditional function of providing housing for low-income families.

There is one area that I, personally, have been especially concerned with in considering this housing legislation. That is the question of interest rates.

We are already paying more than $5 billion too much on the national debt because of drastic interest rate increases during the 1950's. The interest rate increases since we passed the Housing Act of 1961 have already destroyed much of what the Congress hoped to accomplish through that bill.

The most important provision in the 1961 Housing Act was the 221(d)(3) program designed to make reasonable interest rate financing available so that housing could be provided for displaced and other lower and moderate income facilities at rentals they could afford. Under the statutory interest rate formula Congress adopted the program interest rate then was 3½ percent. Now it is 3¾ percent, and I understand it will shortly be going up to 4¼ percent.

A 1-percent increase may not sound like a very important change, but it results in a $10-a-month increase in rent that a family has to pay under the program. The same thing has happened in other housing and public facilities loan programs.

The program of housing for the elderly we started in 1959 is almost at a standstill. Under the statutory interest rate formula Congress adopted the program interest rate then was 3½ percent. Now it is 3¾ and I understand will shortly be going up to 4 percent.

In the college housing program, the interest rate will shortly be a full 1¼ percent higher than the rate we provided by special legislation in 1955.

These programs are important for the whole country from Texarkana College in my district to a moderate-income housing project in New York. I do not want the people we have been trying to help through these programs to think that we have joined forces with the banking interests. We have heard all kinds of new and old excuses raised in the past several years, attempting to justify why we must have high interest rates in our country. The shopworn argument is that inflation is just around the corner, or that this is necessary because of the balance-of-payments problems. These and other reasons have been given why we have to continually jack up interest rates. Not a one of these reasons has any basis in fact. In my opinion, we have more than run out of excuses for not making available adequate financing at reasonable interest rates for our housing and urban development loan programs. If these programs Congress has enacted with a specific interest rate in mind are to accomplish their ends, the Congress, not the private banker, must determine the costs of money under these programs.

Accordingly, in this bill we have followed the same course that the Congress took in 1964 when it limited the new rehabilitation loan rate to a 3 percent interest maximum. We have set this same 3 percent maximum in this bill for the FHA 221(d)(3) below-market moderate income program, for housing loans for the elderly, and for college housing loans.

This comprehensive legislation that is offered you here today is one of the most forward-looking and extensive ever to come before the Congress. It is needed to house the poor. It is needed to build and improve our towns, cities, and suburbs. It is needed to raise the housing standards on our farms. It is needed to help our veterans. It is needed to expand our housing production, provide employment, and to root out poverty.

This landmark bill represents a set of measures to carry out principles and achieve goals that the Congress has consistently and repeatedly supported and endorsed over the past quarter of a century. I strongly urge enactment of this bill.

Mr. WIDNALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

For the past 2 years the members of the Subcommittee on Housing have labored and labored long trying to bring out a bill that could pass the House with support from both sides of the aisle. I personally want to thank the members of the majority party for their very earnest consideration of proposals that were made by minority members of the subcommittee. I do believe that what has come out of the subcommittee and been approved by the full committee has been a consensus of proposals that mean a lot to the welfare of America and to enterprise in the housing field.

Particularly I want to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARRETT], who was certainly most patient in trying to work these things out and to see what could be done to develop a better program giving a full hearing to the view of the minority members of the subcommittee.

Also, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], the able chairman of the full committee fully cooperated toward molding a bill reflecting divergent proposals and viewpoints.

I believe that this legislation finally voted by the committee has contained many improvements in programs which unfortunately in practice have not lived up to their promise and have in many cases drifted away from the original goals established by Congress.

This year's bill contains a number of new suggestions which emanate in part or in whole from the minority. I think it would be useful for judging the bill as a whole and for guiding those who in the future may search for congressional intent in these areas for some additional comment to be made on these provisions. I feel there is a need for emphasizing this because the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], has gone over the provisions of the entire bill and given a very enlightening development of the various phases of the bill for the Members.

In the field of low-income housing, the committee bill accepts a minority-proposed rent certificate program, in section 103, title I, which was originally suggested last year. It is designed to coordinate with the present public housing program and reach the income levels represented in public housing. It differs from both conventional and public housing and the proposed rent supplement program in that it makes use of existing private housing on a voluntary basis. It differs from the rent supplement program in that it is confined solely to low-income people.

By making use of available private rental housing, the rent certificate approach offers some hope of cutting down immediately on the long waiting lists presently existing throughout the country for conventional public housing. At the same time, it eliminates the major cost of the conventional public housing program, which is the construction and related costs of new housing units. If used in conjunction with a well-planned code enforcement effort, it can also be a stimulus to the rehabilitation of deteriorating areas. By providing that only 10 percent of the units in any one building can be used for public housing tenants, with certain exceptions, the rent certificate approach provides an economic mix without the wide divergence in income possible under the rent supplement approach. This program was first offered by the Republican minority last year and, as originally proposed, would have put 60,000 additional units into operation within 2 years. Had this program been enacted last year, there might very well have been no need for the rent supplement program contained in this year's legislation. A proposal by Congressman FINO to remove the 20-percent gap in the public housing income formula was also accepted in the bill.

Several major changes were proposed by the minority and incorporated into the bill with reference to the operation of the Federal Housing Administration. A new proposal for FHA insured mortgages for veterans provides a 100-percent guarantee for the first $20,000 of value and an 85-percent guarantee on any additional value, up to the FHA maximum of $30,000. The program will be open to all veterans who have not used their eligibility under the Veterans' Administration mortgage insurance program. This will cover all veterans since the Korean war, and is a significant step in recognizing the contributions of those Americans who have served in the defense of their country since that time. In particular, it is a recognition of the sacrifices that have been or are being made in such diverse areas as Berlin, the Lebanon and Formosa Straits crises of the 1950's, and the Korean truce line, as well as Vietnam and Santo Domingo.

In addition, a minority suggestion to lower the interest rates on mortgages which may be insured by FHA under the section 221(d)(3), the below market interest rate program, is included in the bill. Under the present formula, the rate is 3 $\frac{7}{8}$ percent, and will rise to 4 percent or higher on June 30, 1965. The increased cost of borrowing money which was not contemplated by Congress when the program was enacted, must, of course, be passed on in the form of higher rents, thus defeating the purpose of the program. The new formula will set an interest rate ceiling of 3 percent. A compromise has also been achieved on the minority proposal to increase the mortgage limit for homes in outlying areas under the FHA section 203(I) program. There the dollar limit will now be increased from \$11,000 to \$12,500.

In two other areas involving college housing and elderly housing programs, both of which have been highly successful with no defaults, the interest rate formula was recognized by the minority as being out of line with the original intent of Congress. At a time when the baby boom of the postwar years is reaching college age and providing increasing burdens for higher educational facilities throughout the country, the increase in borrowing cost for college housing represented a major threat to our ability to meet these needs.

In the case of elderly housing, the increased interest rates have been passed on in the form of increased rents. Considerable testimony was taken by the Special Housing Subcommittee regarding both programs and the need to continue both programs at a reasonable rate of interest.

Although there were requests for an even lower rate of interest, we believe a ceiling of 3 percent is a realistic figure, or the amount derived under the existing formula, if lower.

Mr. Chairman, it is recognized that there is some subsidy involved, but in my opinion, this is preferable to the costs that would be involved should the pressure for college housing result in the abandonment of the loan program in favor of a construction grant approach. That I feel will be inevitable if we do not do something along the lines recommended by the committee.

Of major importance is title IV, the first attempt to deal on a comprehensive basis with the problems of those whose property is taken under eminent domain in a program conducted by the Federal housing and urban renewal laws.

That, first, provides a comprehensive land acquisition policy designed to insure fair treatment to a property owner whenever a taking is contemplated. Our files are full of what has been happening to the low-income property owner and to the small businessman by way of unfairness in the current condemnation procedures. The applicant for Federal funds under any program administered by the Housing and Home Finance Agency would have to agree to follow the equitable procedures outlined before any assistance could be given.

Second, a major new innovation involves the access afforded a property owner to money owed him for his property. This is an extremely important provision. In too many cases property owners have been forced to go into debt or, in the case of some small business establishment, have been unable to relocate at all, because a money award has been tied up in rounds of negotiations and court cases dragging on for months and years.

At the suggestion of the minority, 75 percent of the appraised value of the property, as appraised by the governmental agency involved, will be made available to the property owner immediately under the terms of this bill. This will in no wise compromise the property owner's claims against the governmental agency, or prohibit his resort to the courts. It will, however, provide the capital to buy a new home or relocate a business with a minimum of financial hardship.

In a small way, individuals displaced by urban renewal and other housing programs will be further compensated as a result of this bill. Costs for transfer of title to property will be reimbursed and additional money will be made available to the very small businessman.

It is my understanding that the administrators of these programs will include as a part of the reimbursable moving expenses, the cost of insurance and storage and installation of relocated fixtures and equipment, at the request of the committee, and as contained in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, while this is a start toward a fuller compensation policy, it is but a start. In my opinion, Federal, State, and local officials alike will eventually have to agree on the concept of replacement costs, suggested by the minority, if fair and just compensation to all is ever to be fully achieved. No arbitrary figure or award will ever be able to guarantee that the individual affected by a taking will be receiving what would be fair and equitable compensation, no more and no less.

Mr. Chairman, in the urban renewal field, the bill incorporates several additional suggestions on the part of the minority, besides providing for some increased protection in eminent domain takings. It extends the minority proposal adopted last year for low-interest rehabilitation loans for a 4-year period, with an open-end authorization.

Mr. Chairman, although the administration has requested a funding for the $50 million authorized in last year's Housing Act, I am concerned with the future of this revolving fund program which the President himself has indicated can take the place of the bulldozer. There is no new request made in the fiscal 1966 budget for the loan program.

Last year the Bureau of the Budget fought successfully a bipartisan effort within Congress to gain funds under last year's authorization.

I trust that both the administration and the Congress will be more aware of the need for appropriations for this program in succeeding years. These are loans, replacing expensive grants for clearance, going back into a revolving fund, and I cannot imagine any reason why anyone would object to this more effective, less expensive approach. I might add that there is specific protection for the private lending industry written into the law which requires proof that a loan could not be obtained on terms the individual could afford from private sources before the individual can qualify for the Federal direct loan program.

In addition, the minority has suggested, and the committee adopted, several provisions providing for a lease guarantee program for small businesses in urban renewal areas, and a study by the HHFA of local and State housing and building codes, zoning policies, tax laws and the like in order to provide information by which private enterprise can be used more effectively to serve the entire housing market and the need to rejuvenate our cities. Two provisions restate congressional intent regarding feasible relocation and planning requirements. Another minority suggestion incorporates into law a report from the General Accounting Office regarding publicly owned, and profitable parking lots within urban renewal areas.

Not every suggestion by the minority has been incorporated, or even carried over in full into the bill. There is considerably more, in my opinion, that can be done regarding the present unfortunate inclination toward commercial and luxury housing renewal projects. Suggestions for a limitation on the amount of luxury housing that any one project can have, and a loan program based on increased tax returns to the cities from commercial renewal projects, should receive further consideration. In one case, where the minority suggestion for a minimum of 30 percent of urban renewal projects to be in the rehabilitation and code enforcement fields has been diluted to a 10 percent floor, the final suggestion may well be worse than no provision at all. The Urban Renewal Commissioner has already testified that 17 percent of urban renewal projects are involved in rehabilitation work, and that was before the institution last year of the code enforcement urban renewal project.

I am not at all satisfied with the way the administrators of these new rehabilitation and code enforcement programs have acted to implement what are essentially congressional and bipartisan programs based on minority ideas. The 10 percent floor could well become a ceiling.

There is then, a good deal in this bill to commend itself for a favorable vote, and by no means is this limited to the proposals made by the minority. There are several sections, such as the new provision for applying the open spaces program to developed land, that deserve fuller consideration and examination by the Congress. On the whole, it is an acceptable bill, but I do not think that anyone would be rash enough to claim that it is perfect. I do urge support of the bill.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the housing and urban development bill of 1965, which we are considering today, is one of the most important pieces of legislation which will come before the Congress this year. I believe it will be a milestone in the history of legislation on housing and urban development.

As my good friends on both sides of the aisle know, this bill is the first omnibus housing bill it has been my privilege to present to this House. I want to express my deep appreciation to my colleagues on the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the Subcommittee on Housing, and especially to the chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Texas. Their cooperation on all aspects of the legislation, and their willingness to spend long hours working over its provisions, have been a rewarding experience which I shall not forget.

The bill I present today is basically the bill sent to us by the President to implement the recommendations made in his message to the Congress concerning the problems and future of the central city and its suburbs. It contains most of the President's major recommendations. In my judgment, however, it has been made a better bill by improvements added in committee.

Many of these improvements were suggested by my good friend, the ranking minority member of the committee. I cannot praise too highly the cooperation I and the entire subcommittee received during all stages of our consideration of the bill from the gentleman from New Jersey. Specifically, section 10, the rent certificate program, is Mr. WIDNALL's; the extension of the very successful program of direct loans for housing for the elderly and reduction of the interest rate was proposed by the minority; more than half of the sections in the urban renewal title—title III—were proposed by Mr. WIDNALL; all of title IV, compensation of condemnees, was taken from Mr. WIDNALL's bill; the no downpayment loans for veterans under FHA was Mr. WIDNALL's amendment, and the authorization for college housing loans and the 3-percent interest rate in title V is his amendment. In fact, every section of the bill clearly shows his imprint.

This bill provides the necessary extensions and additional funds to keep new and existing programs of Federal assistance in the housing and urban development field in full operation over the next 4-year period.

It makes a major attack on the continuing problem of providing decent housing for our lower income citizens in both urban and rural areas. It authorizes new programs to provide community and neighborhood facilities for the Nation's localities. It establishes new programs to beautify our urban and suburban areas.

After 10 days of intensive hearings, the Subcommittee on Housing reported the bill by a vote of 10 to 1. The full committee held 2 days of closed hearings in executive session and on May 19, the full committee approved the subcommittee bill and reported it by a vote of 26 to 7.

Prompt action is needed on this bill because a number of our housing programs have exhausted or nearly exhausted their current authorizations. These include the urban renewal program, the college housing program, and the public housing program. Moreover, FHA's authority to insure mortgages would expire on September 30 under existing law and it is important that we extend this program as soon as possible.

Since this bill amends and extends nearly every program in the fields of housing aid for low income families, mortgage finance, farm housing, and community development, it is necessarily a lengthy and complex bill. I will not cover all the details which are explained in the committee report but I would like to touch on the major features of each title.

Mr. Chairman, title I of the bill would authorize a major new program of housing assistance to lower income families and provide improvements of existing programs to enable these families to obtain decent, safe, and sanitary housing.

A NEW PROGRAM OF RENT SUPPLEMENTS

The rent supplement program, as recommended by the administration, with certain improving amendments by the committee, is the most important of these tools.

The rent supplement program would enable American private enterprise to construct and finance, over the next 4 years, approximately 500,000 dwelling units designed to serve lower income families who cannot now afford decent housing. It would enable low and moderate income families to be able to afford to occupy these privately constructed and financed units by authorizing Federal rent supplement payments to be made on their behalf.

The rent supplement payments would be made with respect to housing built by private nonprofit or limited dividend corporations, or by cooperatives, and financed with section 221(d)(3) market interest rate mortgages insured by FHA.

The rent supplement payments could be made only on behalf of an individual or family unable to obtain standard privately owned housing in his community at a monthly rental which is equal to or less than one-quarter of his monthly income, and who is either displaced by governmental action, elderly or physically handicapped, or occupying substandard housing. Rent supplement payments could not be made on behalf of anyone whose income was more than four times the minimum monthly rent required to obtain standard private housing in the area.

The amount of the rent supplement payment made on behalf of an individual or family could not exceed the difference between 25 percent of the tenant's income and the full rent—which would, of course, cover heat and the utilities and other services generally provided—that is required for the dwelling unit occupied by the individual or family. For the purpose of determining the amount of the income of an individual or family, all income, from every source, whether taxable or not, of the individual or adult members of the family will be included. If, after he moves into the dwelling unit, the income of the individual or family increases, the amount of the rent supplement payments on his behalf is reduced. If his income increases sufficiently so that he can pay the full economic rent with 25 percent of his monthly income, rent supplement payments on his behalf would cease to be made. The tenant could, however, continue to live in the project and would not be required to pay more than the full economic rent.

The bill establishes precise and objective standards as to the amount of income a family may have and still be eligible to have a rent supplement payment made on its behalf.

Under the bill, the Housing Administrator would be required to make a factual finding as to the lowest rent required, in different areas of the country, to obtain a standard one-, two-, three-, or four-bedroom unit.

If in a community a standard one-bedroom unit can be rented for, for example, $75 a month, a family which needs a one-bedroom unit can have a rent supplement payment made on its behalf only if its income is less than $300 a month or $3,600 a year. In other words, any family which, in its own community, can with 25 percent of its monthly income obtain standard housing is not eligible to participate in the rent supplement program.

The Housing Administrator has no authority to make any rent supplement payment on behalf of a family which, with one-fourth of its monthly income, can pay the monthly rental required for standard housing in the area.

Data submitted to the committee indicated that there are very few areas where a two-bedroom unit suitable for a three- or four-person family cannot be obtained for $100 per month or less and that even larger families can obtain suitable housing for $125 or less per month in most communities.

This, of course, assures that in almost every area no three- or four-person family whose income is more than $400 a month or $4,800 a year, or a larger family whose income is $500 a month or $6,000 a year, will have a rent supplement paid on their behalf.

It should be emphasized, of course, that there are maximum incomes for eligibility purposes. The great bulk of rent supplement tenants would have incomes below the maximum. And where an occupant's income is up close to the ceiling, the supplement would be correspondingly small and the family would be paying a substantial rent out of its own income.

The organizations owning the project would select the families who would occupy the dwelling units in the project, but would have no voice in determining a family's eligibility to have a rent supplement paid on its behalf or the amount of any supplement payment. Facts relating to eligibility to have a rent supplement paid on a family's behalf or the size of the payment would be determined by the Housing Administrator or his agent.

Prospective occupants or their applications would be referred to agencies such as the community's relocation service or a similar qualified organization designated by the Housing Administrator for the purpose of certifying the facts concerning eligibility. The certification would relate to the tenant's age or physical handicap where this is the basis for eligibility, or displacement, or occupancy of substandard housing. Certifications would also relate to incomes at initial occupancy. Every 2 years thereafter, or more frequently if the Housing Administrator deems it desirable, recertifications of incomes would be required, except in the case of the elderly whose incomes increase so seldom that there would be little need to require recertification.

The housing units that would be utilized under the rent supplement program will be of modest design. The average mortgage amount that FHA will permit for a project in a particular area will not exceed that permitted under FHA section 221(d)(3) below-market interest rate projects in that area. Under the below-market interest rate program, FHA limits the maximum mortgage amounts permissible in an area and assures that only units of such cost are built as will require rents appropriate for moderate-income families in the area.

The national average mortgage amount under the below-market interest rate projects for which FHA has issued commitments to insure is approximately $12,500. If a rent supplement program had been in operation during this time, the average mortgage amount would have been close to this figure. Rent supplement payments will not be made on high-cost or luxury-type apartments.

Financing would be provided by means of FHA section 221 market interest rate insured loans, with the regular mortgage insurance premium and a maximum term of 40 years.

Under the rent supplement program, the Housing Administrator would enter into a separate contract with the owner of each project in which tenants are to receive the benefit of rent supplement payments. The contract would provide for rent supplement payments by the Housing Administrator to the owner during the period in which the project is covered by an FHA-insured mortgage with the maximum term for any such contract being set at 40 years.

The contract would specify the number of units in the project to be made available to tenants for whom rent supplement payments would be made. It would specify a maximum dollar amount to be paid annually by the Housing Administrator to the owner of the project based on the total rent for the number of units in the project to be made available for rent supplement payments.

The contract would also provide that the amount of monthly payments to be made will be determined on the basis of the total of the amounts required by way of a rent supplement payment for each particular tenant and that these amounts will be adjusted periodically as tenants move out, as new tenants move in, and as there are changes in the income of tenants receiving the supplement payments.

The supplement payments could be made on a monthly or other periodic basis by the Housing Administrator to the project owner. An owner would not receive any payment for units which are not occupied.

The Federal rent supplement payments contracted to be made under this program could not exceed appropriations of $50 million per annum prior to July 1, 1966, and this amount would be increased by $50 million on July 1 of each of the years 1966, 1967, and 1968.

Mr. Chairman, the rent supplement program I have outlined is the most important and vital new program which would be established by the bill. In the President's words, it is "the most crucial new instrument in our effort to improve the American city." In my opinion, it is the most promising program yet devised to deal with a housing problem which has plagued this Nation for decades.

Up to now, the Federal Government's primary programs to provide additional housing for low- and moderate-income families have been the low-rent public housing program and the section 221(d) (3) below-market-interest-rate program. However, as helpful as these programs have been, in helping low- and moderate-income families to obtain standard housing, they, and similar State housing programs, reach only a very small part of the total number of lower income families.

Of the 1.6 million housing starts last year, less than 60,000 were units assisted under Federal or State programs designed to help these families.

In the case of public housing, a variety of factors have limited construction. In the case of the (d) (3) program, rising interest rates and land and construction costs have resulted in this program serving a higher income group than originally intended by the Congress in 1961.

Mr. Chairman, the rent supplement program will greatly increase the supply of standard housing at reasonable rentals by using the initiative and resources of private enterprise. Housing under this program will be planned and built by private organizations. It will be financed by private funds. Federal participation will be involved only in the making of those rent supplement payments on behalf of eligible families and persons needed to enable them to be able to afford the units constructed.

Mr. Chairman, some who have for 30 years fought and obstructed the public housing program, now wring their hands and pretend that the rent supplement program will jeopardize the public housing program.

It is not true. It is a smokescreen thrown up to confuse and divide those of us who for many years have stood together and fought to provide better housing for our low income families.

The same title of this bill that will establish the rent supplement program as a new and additional tool to provide standard housing for low income families also authorizes an additional 240,000 units of public housing over the next 4 years. This would be one of the largest public housing authorizations in the history of the public housing program.

The same title of this bill which will establish the rent supplement program authorizes new methods of utilizing the public housing program and will enable local authorities to use existing private housing units for public housing.

And it is safe to predict that those gentlemen who, with tongue in cheek, express such concern that the rent supplement program will jeopardize the public housing program will vote against both the rent supplement program and the public housing program.

No one knows better than I the value of the public housing program. I say to those who have labored long in the cause of public housing that the rent supplement program is no threat to public housing.

There is work enough for all. The housing needs of low and moderate income families cannot be met under existing programs alone.

Mr. Chairman, the committee heard testimony that the number of low income families on the waiting list for public housing units has reached 500,000. In this situation, it is obvious that we must use every possible tool to deal with the housing needs of our low and moderate income families. The public housing program is, and will remain, one of our basic tools for providing standard housing for low income families. To the extent that the rent supplement program can serve these families it will constitute a needed supplement—not a substitute—to public housing. The need is sufficiently great to warrant maximum efforts under both programs.

It is essential to encourage by every means available the construction of a greater volume of housing geared to the needs of lower income families. The rent supplement program can be the most successful approach yet devised for this purpose because it enlists all the initiative and resources of private enterprise. Testimony before the committee indicated that, through this program, the Nation's private civic-minded groups, lending institutions, and business leaders can provide more than 500,000 new housing units designed to serve low and moderate income families over the next 4 years.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that enactment of this program will be the most constructive step the Congress can take in providing decent housing for every American.

MODIFICATION OF INTEREST RATE

Another important provision of the bill places an interest rate ceiling of 3 percent on mortgages which may be insured under the section 221(d) (3) below-market interest rate rental housing program.

The 221(d) (3) program has been, and can continue to be, an extremely effective tool for providing housing designed to meet the needs of moderate-income families. The statutory interest rate formula resulted in mortgages bearing a $3\frac{1}{8}$ interest rate when the program was enacted in 1961. Under the statutory formula mortgages now must bear an interest rate of $3\frac{3}{8}$ percent and the committee has been advised that the rate is expected to rise again to 4 percent or higher at the end of this month.

These rising interest rates, combined with increasing construction and land costs, have resulted in rents in these projects higher than those intended by the Congress through the low rate set in 1961. The 3-percent interest rate ceiling established by the bill will have the effect of reducing rentals charged in these projects to levels within the means of a greater number of low- and moderate-income families.

LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING

The Housing Act of 1964 authorized an interim increase of 37,500 units of low-rent public housing. However, the local communities' demand for additional units, based on the needs of their low-income families and the elderly, has reached 90,000 units. In addition, Housing Agency officials have informed the committee that over the past year, more than 300 communities have initiated new low-rent housing programs. Of these communities, more than 170 are participating for the first time, making a total of more than 700 additional communities since 1961.

To meet this increasing demand for public housing, the bill would increase the authorization for annual contributions contracts to permit the construction of approximately 140,000 units over the next 4 years. In addition, it would permit—through the short-term use of privately owned housing and through low-rent housing in private accommodations—the use, over the next 4 years, of up to 100,000 additional units suitable for low-rent housing purposes.

The committee believes that two new approaches adopted to permit and encourage the use of existing housing will provide localities participating in the program important new tools to supplement their existing programs. Under the first approach, recommended by the administration, local housing authorities will be permitted to purchase, purchase and rehabilitate, or lease existing privately owned housing through enactment of a technical change in the public housing law. This change—which would permit the amortization of a local housing authority's indebtedness over a period less than the 30- to 40-year periods required under the existing annual contributions formula—would enable local housing authorities to provide additional units of various sizes, especially for large families, in areas where there are substantial vacancies in privately owned housing.

Under the second approach, recommended by the gentleman from New Jersey, a new program of low-rent housing in private accommodations would be established under the public housing program. Under this program, local housing agencies would be permitted to utilize a community's existing inventory of privately owned vacant units by leasing them from owners for use as low-rent housing. Tenants in these private accommodations would be selected by the owners, subject only to existing provisions in the public housing law relating to eligibility. Rentals would be negotiated and agreed to by the owner and the local agency. In no case could the annual contribution payable for the lease of a private unit be greater than that required for new public housing in the community.

The committee believes these new approaches will make it possible for many localities to strengthen their existing programs by permitting them greater flexibility in choosing the most appropriate means of providing low-rent housing. In many cases, for example, local authorities will be able to provide units more quickly, and in greater variety to accommodate various sizes of families, than solely through new construction. In addition, these new approaches should be particularly useful in localities where there are substantial vacancy rates and in gray areas where they would encourage the conservation and improvement of residential properties.

I wish to emphasize one other point regarding the low-income public housing program. The committee heard testimony from many housing organizations concerning the need to provide a broader range of social services to families in public housing projects. Services such as counseling of families moving into or out of public housing projects, counseling on the upkeep of units, family money management, and the availability of community and recreational facilities can help families in these projects make an easier adjustment to urban living conditions.

The committee has been informed that without any additional authorization, the Housing Agency can authorize local housing authorities to provide these services as part of the general cost of project management. In addition, Housing Agency officials have informed the committee that the Public Housing Administration will work with other interested Federal agencies, such as the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Office of Economic Opportunity on providing a broad range of services to these low-income families. Providing these services will enable the public housing provided by private enterprise, greater contribution in meeting the social needs of low-income families.

The bill would also provide for parity of treatment between the handicapped and the elderly for low-rent housing purposes by extending to the handicapped the advantages of certain provisions of the public housing law presently applicable to the elderly.

In addition, the bill would eliminate the requirement that there be a 20-percent gap between the upper rental limits for admission to a low-rent housing project and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing a substantial supply of standard housing. Previous laws have already eliminated the 20-percent gap requirement for the displaced and the elderly. It is inequitable to exclude any income group from the advantages of the program when they cannot afford housing provided by private enterprise.

REHABILITATION GRANTS TO HOMEOWNERS IN URBAN AREAS

The bill would also authorize a new program of grants to low-income homeowners in urban renewal areas to finance repairs and improvements necessary to bring their homes up to standards required in the community or the urban renewal plan for the area. These grants would be used only in hardship cases, generally to avoid the displacement which would result for those families, particularly the elderly, who have no other means of financing required repairs and improvements.

A rehabilitation grant under the new section 115 may cover the actual cost of the repairs and improvements involved up to a maximum of $1,500; except that, if the homeowner's income exceeds $2,000 a year, the grant would in any case be limited to the portion of such cost which cannot be paid for with any available loan that can be amortized without requiring the homeowner's housing expense to exceed 25 percent of his monthly income.

TITLE II—FHA INSURANCE OPERATIONS

Title II of the bill authorizes a new program of FHA mortgage insurance for land development in subdivisions and extends and improves FHA's programs of mortgage insurance.

Section 201 of the bill would add a new title to the National Housing Act and permit the FHA to insure mortgages on projects for land development. This would permit the well-established FHA credit assistance device which has encouraged the flow of private credit for privately built good homes to be available to encourage the flow of credit so that private enterprise can provide a larger and more even supply of properly planned residential building sites. The program has as its immediate purpose an improved supply of credit, at reasonable interest rates, for land preparation. It has as its ultimate purpose an increased supply of moderately priced good building lots in good neighborhoods. No component of housing cost has risen more rapidly than land. There is a pressing need for financial assistance to enable builders to develop land more efficiently and at lower cost.

Among the major beneficiaries, along with consumers, will be small builders, who build perhaps 10 or 20 houses a year and who cannot readily compete with large builders in finding good home sites.

The legislation itself is, to a degree, experimental; and the program would therefore be limited to a 4-year period to give the Congress a clear opportunity to review it carefully. The FHA-insured loans would finance such activities as the acquisition of land, its clearance, and its improvement with water and sewer facilities, roads, streets, sidewalks, and storm drainage facilities. Only private subdivision developers would be eligible to receive the insured mortgage loan.

The loan could not exceed 75 percent of the FHA's estimate of the aggregate value of the lots after improvement. The loan would also be limited to the sum of 50 percent of the value of the land before development and 90 percent of the cost of the site improvements. In a typical case this formula actually provides for a loan equal to about 75 percent of the sum of the value of the land and the cost of the improvements. The maximum outstanding dollar amount of any insured loan would be $12.5 million and the maximum maturity would be 7 years.

The project would be required to represent a good insurance risk. That is, the FHA would be required to find that the project was an acceptable risk in the light of the purpose of the legislation—which is to provide credit aid only for well-planned land development contributing to sound and economic urban growth.

The physical improvements and the general development plan of the project would be required to comply, not only with FHA minimum standards, but also with all applicable State and local governmental requirements. In all cases, the lots would be part of good neighborhoods, likely to have a long economic life and adequately served by shopping, school, recreational, transportation, and similar public facilities.

In addition to the new FHA mortgage insurance program for land development authorized by the bill, a new program of no-downpayment, FHA-insured loans for veterans would be authorized. Under this program any veteran of either peacetime or wartime service in the armed services could purchase a home with no downpayment where the value of the home does not exceed $20,000. If the home costs more than $20,000 the downpayment would be 15 percent of the value of the home in excess of $20,000. This loan would not be available for a veteran who has already received a loan under the GI program. Mr. Chairman, before including this program in the bill Mr. TEAGUE, chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, was consulted. He has assured us that the provision has his approval.

The bill would continue for 4 years—up until October 1, 1969—all of FHA's existing housing programs. It would also make a number of changes in these programs and authorize some changes in their administration.

The revisions of existing programs include an increase in the limit on the amount of a mortgage on a home in an outlying area from $11,000 to $12,500. Also, the maximum amount of a mortgage financing the purchase of a home by a serviceman would be increased from $20,000 to $30,000. These larger mortgage limits reflect the increased costs of housing construction.

The per family unit limit on the amount of a mortgage financing rental housing would be raised where the dwelling units consist of four or more bedrooms. This provision should encourage the production of rental units for larger families where needed.

Some liberalization would be made in the FHA provisions limiting the amount of a mortgage financing rehabilitation of 1- to 11-family structures in urban renewal areas. In addition, a mortgage financing rental housing in urban renewal areas would be permitted to finance more nondwelling facilities than under present law. This amendment will encourage early occupancy of rental housing provided in cleared areas.

Substantial economies should result to both FHA and the Treasury from authority provided by the bill for FHA to consolidate around 18 insurance funds into 1 fund, and discretionary authority provided to the Commissioner to pay insurance benefits to lenders in cash instead of issuing debentures. The Commissioner's authority to issue debentures in payment of insurance benefits is carefully retained by the bill so that at any time the Commissioner can revert to the present system of paying most insurance benefits in debentures. Of course, this provision does not change certain programs where advance commitments to make cash insurance payments have previously been authorized as additional inducements to lenders to make the loans.

Another significant FHA provision in the bill is the provision of mutuality for management type cooperatives, which would give these cooperatives the same treatment in this respect as the regular FHA section 203(b) home mortgagors.

It has been brought to the attention of the Banking and Currency Committee that the existing practice of requiring competitive bidding in the sale of FHA-acquired housing unfairly discriminates against cooperatives. Usually, competitive bidding serves a desirable purpose. However, it is unfair to cooperatives because they can only organize for the purpose of acquiring housing if they have reasonable assurance that they can complete the purchase. Cooperatives should be able to negotiate for the purchase of FHA housing at full market value as determined by the FHA Commissioner. He has authority to do this under existing law, and we believe that he should.

TITLE III—URBAN RENEWAL

Title III of the bill continues and strengthens the slum clearance and urban renewal program, begun by the Housing Act of 1949. This program, supported by the Nation's business and civic groups and local government officials, has proven to be of tremendous value and benefit to both large and small cities in every part of the country. It is making possible a comprehensive attack on the slums which blight most of the Nation's communities.

Mr. Chairman, an immensely important benefit of the urban renewal program, which is becoming increasingly recognized by all, has been the improvement that has resulted in local financial resources throughout the country.

Our communities are faced with an overwhelming demand for more health, police, fire, and other municipal services. This demand is straining their financial resources. One of the most severe problems facing our communities, in trying to meet these demands, is the fact that slum areas need far more municipal services than they return in taxes.

By clearing these slums, and replacing them with new and rehabilitated construction, the urban renewal program has substantially increased tax revenues and thereby enabled many of our localities to increase their municipal services.

This title would increase the capital grant authorization for the urban renewal program by $2.9 billion, sufficient to carry on this program for an estimated 4 years. In my judgment, this amount is absolutely essential. It is less than the mayors and other local officials of the Nation requested. However, the committee believes that, balanced against our other needs, this amount will be adequate to carry the program at a reasonable level over the next 4 years.

This title also authorizes the Housing Administrator to conduct a comprehensive study of housing and building laws and codes, zoning and land use laws, and tax policies, and to report to the President and the Congress on the results of the study. Mr. Chairman, the committee has heard much testimony in recent years concerning the restraints which these laws often place on builders and developers in providing lower cost housing in our urban areas. The purpose of this study, recommended by the gentleman from New Jersey, is to enable the committee to determine how these various laws can be utilized to more effectively permit private enterprise to produce lower cost housing and to serve a larger part of the need for such housing.

Two important provisions of this title reflect the concern of many individuals for the need to place greater emphasis on code enforcement and rehabilitation activities under the urban renewal program:

The first would make available for urban renewal projects involving primarily code enforcement and rehabilitation, at least 10 percent of the new urban renewal capital grant authority provided in the bill and subsequent bills and the authorization for direct rehabilitation loans under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964.

The second provision would remove the $50 million limit on the authorization for funds under the section 312 rehabilitation program which provides 3-percent loans and authorize such additional appropriations as are needed to carry out the program.

These provisions, which we owe largely to the efforts of the gentleman from New Jersey, will minimize the need for demolition and clearance in the urban renewal program in a practical way, without placing a straitjacket on communities carrying out essential clearance activities.

Another provision of the bill strengthens the workable program requirement in the urban renewal law to require localities, as part of these programs, to establish priorities for individual urban renewal projects and to coordinate such projects with other community activities and programs. This amendment to the law would make clear that the Housing Administrator, in recertifying a locality's workable program, has authority to require that each urban renewal project is consistent with the community's overall renewal objectives and resources.

To meet the requirement of this provision of the bill that the workable program provide sufficient information for the Housing Administrator to evaluate a particular proposed project, the workable program should identify blighted or declining neighborhoods in the community, indicate the factors causing the deterioration, and provide a basis for scheduling urban renewal activities of various kinds.

This amendment should result in localities placing greater emphasis on the planning and scheduling of urban renewal activities in accordance with its overall renewal objectives and priorities and resources.

This title also contains provisions designed to give greater assistance to business concerns and others displaced from urban renewal areas by authorizing a lease guaranty program for small businesses and requiring relocation assistance programs established during urban renewal projects to provide additional information to all displacees.

TITLE IV—COMPENSATION OF CONDEMNNEES

Title IV of the bill deals with a problem of growing concern to many members of the committee and the Congress. In recent years there has been an increasing number of complaints questioning the fairness of procedures followed by local public agencies which acquire land for use in the course of public improvement programs. Many of the programs under which land is taken for public use receive substantial amounts of Federal financial assistance.

Of particular concern in recent years has been the problem of differing methods of land acquisition being followed in various federally assisted programs.

This title of the bill, recommended by the gentleman from New Jersey, would deal with this problem by establishing uniform land acquisition procedures to be followed by local public agencies in the acquisition of land by eminent domain under certain programs administered by the Housing and Home Finance Agency. The programs covered would be the public housing and urban renewal programs, the public facility loan program, the college housing program, the senior citizens housing program, and the open-space land program.

The bill would require local agencies, as a condition of eligibility for Federal assistance under these programs, to satisfy the Housing Administrator that certain policies would be followed in acquiring land by eminent domain in the course of the particular program. These policies would involve such actions by the local agency as making every reasonable effort to acquire the land by negotiation, rather than through eminent domain; permitting the owner of land an opportunity to accompany the appraiser; and giving owners of land to be taken at least 90 days written notice of the date on which project activities are scheduled to begin.

In addition, where the owner disputes the price established by the local agency as fair and reasonable for the property, the agency would be required to make the owner an advance payment of 75 percent of the most recent price established for the land. This advance payment would later be applied to the ultimate price for the property established by eminent domain proceedings. This provision will help owners of land who often must bear the cost of litigation and moving expenses resulting from eminent domain proceedings over long periods of time.

This title would also make the relocation payment provisions enacted by the Congress in 1964 applicable to the college and elderly housing programs and the public facility loans and open-space land programs. These payments are presently authorized only under the public housing and urban renewal programs.

In addition, this title would increase from $1,500 to $2,500 the amount of the relocation payment authorized by the 1964 act to displace small business concerns and authorizes additional payments for expenses which are incidental to the taking of a person's property. These new payments would include such items as expenses incurred for recording fees, transfer taxes, mortgage prepayment penalties, and a pro rata share of real estate taxes covering a period after the owner transfers title to his property. The committee believes these additional payments are clearly justified. An owner of property acquired during a public improvement program should be reimbursed for any expenses resulting from transferring title to his property.

TITLE V—COLLEGE HOUSING

Title V of the bill extends and provides additional funds for the college housing loan program, one of the most successful programs that the Federal Government has ever undertaken. In its 15 years of operation it has helped to provide housing for more than 660,000 students and faculty in over 2,500 projects—and it has done this without experiencing a single default.

Of course, the tremendous job of housing our college and university students and faculty is far from finished. The Office of Education estimates that college enrollment will increase by 1.5 million in the next 4 years and that about 25 percent of this increased enrollment will require housing and related facilities such as student unions, dining halls, and health centers. Accordingly, the bill would provide for increases of $300 million in the college housing loan authorization in each of the next 4 years.

In addition, the bill establishes an interest rate ceiling of 3 percent on loans under this program, a rate which the committee believes will enable the program to more effectively serve our growing college population. Under the existing statutory interest rate formula, the program lending rate is currently 3¾ percent and would rise to 4 percent on June 30. The reduced interest rate will serve to lower rentals charged to college students for their housing accommodations.

TITLE VI—COMMUNITY FACILITIES

Title VI deals with two of the most pressing problems facing the Nation's localities—the need for basic water and sewer works and for neighborhood facilities such as health and recreation centers.

Mr. Chairman, the rapid rise in population in recent years, coupled with the increasing demands on the financial resources of our localities, has outpaced the ability of many communities to provide adequate basic water and sewer facilities. The Housing Subcommittee heard repeatedly of the tremendous backlog of additional water and sewer facilities needed to keep up with the surging growth of our population. By 1975, the urban population alone is expected to increase by 50 million and the per capita use of municipal water is expected to increase from 140 to 160 gallons per day.

In addition, many localities have had to forego investment, no matter how greatly needed, in neighborhood facilities such as community recreation centers, health stations, and other public buildings housing health and recreational facilities. Mr. Chairman, such facilities are essential to our communities so that they can effectively meet the undesirable social effects of idleness upon their juvenile and elderly population.

Accordingly, the purpose of title VI of the bill is to provide financial assistance to communities to construct badly needed water and sewer works and neighborhood facilities such as health and recreational centers.

The bill would authorize the Housing Administrator to make grants to localities to finance up to 50 percent of the cost of basic public water and sewer projects. These grants would be available to all communities, regardless of size. They could be used to expand, enlarge, or improve existing water and sewer facilities, as well as to construct new facilities. Eligible water facilities projects would include facilities to store, supply, treat, purify, or distribute safe, potable water for domestic, commercial, and industrial use. Eligible sewer facilities would include sanitary sewer systems for the collection, transmission, and discharge of liquid wastes, storm sewer systems, and other facilities for the collection and disposal of other categories of wastes.

Although this program will cover a wide range of needs in the field of basic water and sewer facilities, it will not duplicate the very successful program of grants for waste treatment plants under the Water Pollution Control Act.

In addition, the bill contains provisions designed to assure that Federal grant funds do not finance uncoordinated or piecemeal water and sewer facilities. Grant funds would be available only for facilities which are designed so that adequate capacity will be available to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area and which are or will be consistent with areawide water or sewer facilities systems.

The bill also authorizes grants to localities to finance specific projects for neighborhood facilities such as community centers, youth centers, health stations, and other public buildings which provide health or recreation or similar social services. Grants would be available to cover up to two-thirds of the cost of these projects, with provision for three-fourths grants in the case of a project located in economically depressed areas.

Neighborhood facilities projects assisted under this new program would have to be so located as to be available for use by a significant portion of an area's low- and moderate-income residents. In addition, a priority is given to applications for projects that primarily benefit members of low-income families or which otherwise further the objectives of a community action program approved under the Economic Opportunity Act. The committee expects that a great majority of neighborhood facilities for which grants will be made under this program will be used in connection with these community action programs.

TITLE VII—FNMA

Title VII of the bill contains important provisions affecting the Federal National Mortgage Association's activities under its special assistance programs.

The first provision would increase the revolving authority under which the President authorizes FNMA to furnish special assistance to mortgage financing of certain housing. This increase would be $1,625,000 over the next 4 years.

Mr. Chairman, FNMA's special assistance authority has been vital to the success of many of our most important housing programs, and will prove to be even more valuable in the coming years. This is especially true in the case of mortgages insured by the FHA under the section 221(d)(3) below-market-interest-rate program. Because of their below-market interest rates, which would be reduced by the bill to 3 percent, it is clear that all of the mortgages insured by the FHA under this program will be offered to FNMA for purchase. It is the committee's understanding that approximately one and a half billion in new authorization will be set aside by the administration for this one program. Thus, FNMA special assistance authority will continue to do its part in helping to expand the supply of rental housing available for low- and moderate-income families.

Another provision of the bill, although contained in title I, relates to FNMA's activities with respect to these section 221(d)(3) mortgages. The Housing Act of 1964 authorized FNMA to sell participations in pools of mortgages held by it under its special assistance programs or management and liquidations functions, or held by other Federal agencies. These participations permit the substitution of private funds for Treasury funds to finance these mortgage holdings. Because of their below-market interest rates, section 221(d)(3) mortgages have not been included in the pools. To make it feasible for these mortgages to be included in future pools, the bill would authorize funds to reimburse FNMA for its expenses in including these mortgages in the pools.

This provision would make it possible to substitute private financing for substantial portions of the amounts of section 221(d)(3) mortgages.

TITLE VIII—OPEN-SPACE LAND AND URBAN BEAUTIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT

As the President emphasized in both his message on natural beauty and his message on cities, one of the greatest needs of our towns and cities is additional Federal assistance for the acquisition of parks and playgrounds and for the beautification and improvement of these and other public areas. The bill would provide that needed assistance.

The open-space land acquisition program, authorized by the Housing Act of 1961, would be strengthened and expanded. Maximum grants under the present program would be increased from 30 to 40 percent.

Forty percent grants would be authorized, also, for the provision of open-space land through the acquisition and clearance of land in built-up areas. This would enable the program to provide increased assistance for downtown and neighborhood parks. The present authority, limited as it is to acquisition only of undeveloped land, has for the most part assisted land acquisition only in the suburbs.

In general, large areas will not be acquired under this new authority. Land in developed areas is expensive, and localities will always think twice about changing it from a taxable asset into a maintenance cost. However, many localities have an urgent need for more open space—both neighborhoods lots for children, and downtown malls and parks for office workers and shoppers. Where localities are willing to do their share in providing such facilities, the Federal Government, also, can count its money as well-spent.

In addition, an entirely new program would authorize grants for local programs for landscaping, park improvement, and other urban beautification and improvement.

The usual Federal grant would be 40 percent of the increased expenditures by the locality for such activities. However, $5 million would be authorized to be used for higher percentage grants—up to 100 percent of cost—for beautification and improvement projects which would be of special value to other localities in testing and demonstrating new beautification methods and techniques.

This program is a promising new approach in Federal assistance for our towns and cities. Making our parks and other public areas more attractive and useful are problems which must and will be met primarily through local efforts. However, Federal assistance is also needed.

What is more, it can be provided through this program without substituting Federal for local decisions. Assisted activities would have to be part of a locally approved beautification and improvement program. These programs would be prepared by the applicant and other interested local bodies. They, rather than the Federal Government, would make the basic decisions as to how much is to be spent and what kinds of activities are to be assisted.

TITLE IX—RURAL HOUSING

Mr. Chairman, title IX of the bill is the rural housing title. The hearings of our subcommittee clearly revealed the immediate need for expansion of the rural housing program.

There is twice the proportion of substandard housing in rural areas as there is in our cities and suburbs.

Half of the rural families with incomes of less than $3,000 a year are living in houses that are so run-down they need replacement or major repairs to make them decently habitable. These are families who do not have enough income to repair their homes and cannot obtain a modest home improvement loan from conventional creditors.

A widespread housing credit gap continues to exist in rural areas despite the efforts of the Farmers Home Administration and the Federal Housing Administration to reach further and more effectively into rural areas.

An example of the inadequacy of the present rural housing program was brought out in the committee hearings this year where it was revealed that the Farmers Home Administration had a backlog of more than 15,000 housing loan applications on hand. This has been going on for several years. This agency has not had sufficient loan funds to meet this backlog of loan applications totaling more than $100 million.

New rural housing legislation is obviously called for. The President has recommended it.

Under title IX, rural housing loans totaling $300 million could be insured each year by the Farmers Home Administration for families in low or moderate income levels who would pay interest at a rate not to exceed 5 percent. Additional loans could be insured each year for families with incomes above the moderate level and these families would pay interest rates comparable to the rates paid on insured Federal Housing Administration loans. The new insured rural housing program will serve to reduce, to some degree, the inequality in opportunities for urban and rural families in the field of housing, without increasing the burden on the Federal budget.

The committee has confidence that the Farmers Home Administration can do an outstanding job in administering this expanded program with proper legislative authority. The committee has noted the experience the Farmers Home Administration has had in the successful operation of the insured loan program for farmownership and soil and water loans under the Consolidated Farmers Home Administration Act of 1961. It makes good commonsense that the same type of insured loan program be adapted to the large rural housing loan needs.

There are, however, several differences between the two programs: First is that the proposed bill would establish a 5-year minimum repurchase period for the insured notes, whereas the 1961 act permits a 3-year minimum period;

During deliberations of your committee on title IX, we considered very carefully the best way to handle this insured mortgage paper. The administration bill proposed that it be sold to maturity at whatever discount rate might be necessary at the time. It was the feeling of the committee that 33-year notes bearing 5 percent interest could not be sold at par. The observation was made that the Department of Agriculture through the Farmers Home Administration is and has been selling similar paper to local and national lenders at par, but for shorter periods of time. The committee considered the alternatives very carefully and concluded that such notes should not be sold at discount, resulting in request for an appropriation to make up the loss, when they can be sold at par. So it is the intent of the pending legislation that this paper be sold at par as long as possible even though this requires an agreement to repurchase the paper from the original lender after 5 years.

Second, any amount withheld as a loan insurance charge is discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture under this bill. The act of 1961 requires a minimum charge of one-half of 1 percent. The greater latitude of this bill is designed to provide more flexibility in establishing the interest return to investors in insured loans and thus improve their salability.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of other features and improvements in this bill that I should like to discuss briefly:

AUTHORITY TO BUY PREVIOUSLY OCCUPIED HOMES AND BUILDING SITES

Throughout rural America there are many vacant houses that are structurally sound and can be purchased and modernized at a cost considerably below the cost of a new house. Under present law, rural housing loans to buy previously occupied dwellings and the sites may be made only to senior citizens who are at least 62 years of age. The committee believes that extending this authority to all age groups in rural areas will be a way of effectively using existing sound structures and in helping low-income families acquire a decent home of their own within their capacity to pay.

INTEREST RATES

In order to make the insured loans salable without substantial discounts, the interest rate would be 5 percent per annum on loans to low- or moderate-income families. For borrowers above the moderate level, rates will be comparable to interest rates and insurance charges paid by families who use Federal Housing Administration insured loans.

The committee also recognizes that many families have such low incomes that they cannot pay the higher rates that are necessary to make insured loans salable. For this reason, the bill provides that, on direct loans to senior citizens and on the specialized direct loans to all low-income families involving minor repairs to make the house safe and sanitary, the maximum interest rate will remain at 4 percent.

The bill also retains in the Secretary of Agriculture discretionary authority to set rates at less than the statutory maximum for direct loans to families in distress situations, such as those whose buildings are destroyed or damaged by natural disasters and families with low incomes who cannot afford to pay 5-percent interest.

With respect to direct loans to non-profit organizations for senior citizens rental housing, the maximum rate will be 3 percent.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A RURAL HOUSING DIRECT-LOAN ACCOUNT

In order to simplify the budgetary operations of the rural housing program, the bill provides for the establishment of a rural housing direct-loan account. In this account would be deposited borrowings from the Treasury and appropriations for direct loans under title V of the Housing Act of 1949 as well as future collections on direct loans. All rural housing direct loans would be made out of the direct-loan account to the extent authorized annually by the Congress. Collections and other funds in this account would be utilized to make these loans.

EXTENSION OF RURAL HOUSING PROGRAM

The committee recommends an extension to October 1, 1969, of existing authorizations that expire September 30, 1965, to permit orderly administration of the rural housing programs.

RENTAL HOUSING FOR DOMESTIC FARM LABOR

Provisions are also contained in this bill to increase from $10 to $50 million the total authorized for section 516 grants to provide low-rent housing for domestic farm labor. This is a most critical housing problem in a number of rural areas. Because of the short period of occupancy of housing by farm laborers, most growers cannot afford the total cost of adequate housing. Because of the seasonally short work period, most farm laborers are unable to pay the rent required to provide the necessary income to repay the loan for the full cost of the housing. These grants, which may be made up to two-thirds of the cost of the rental housing, would speed up the rate of replacing the existing farm labor slums with housing that is more adequate and decent but still modest and economical.

RURAL HOUSING NEEDS

The need for more credit resources for rural housing is great. The fact that insured loans will be made, for the most part, to low- or moderate-income people who are unable to get credit from conventional sources does not mean these will be unsound loans. Quite the contrary.

Experience by the Farmers Home Administration has shown a remarkable repayment record and an almost phenomenal low-loss record for rural housing loans.

Since the beginning of the program in 1949 through January 1, 1956, Farmers Home Administration has made rural housing loans totaling $783 million to 97,000 rural families. As of January 1, 1965, borrowers had repaid $176.4 million in principal plus $87.5 million in interest.

More than 19,000, or 20 percent, of the families had repaid their loans in full, many before they had become due. Borrowers with payments due had paid 104 percent of the amount matured.

Foreclosures were less than one for each thousand loans made.

Losses have been negligible, amounting to less than 1/200 of 1 percent of the amount loaned.

Any way you look at it, the insured rural housing program that will be created by title IX is a good program—it will be a big step forward toward raising livingstandards in rural America and the program is actuarially sound. The program puts no strain on the budget.

TITLE X—MISCELLANEOUS

Title X, the last title of the bill, would eliminate existing dollar ceilings for the appropriation of funds for the urban planning assistance program, the public works planning advance program and the Federal-State training program. A cutoff date of October 1, 1969, would be provided for each program. Funds would be made available only through appropriations.

The title would also extend the investment authority of saving and loan associations by permitting them to make college housing loans and by broadening their power to make leasehold loans. I would like to make it clear that the reference to fraternity houses and sorority houses in section 1007 is not intended to refer to houses that serve merely as meeting places. It is intended, as the context indicates, to cover only such houses as include rooming accommodations so that they may provide what might be called a residence away from home.

Mr. Chairman, this completes the review of the major provisions of H.R. 7984. I realize that this is a large and a complex bill, but that is because the problems of housing and urban development are equally large and complex.

I have not taken the time to touch on every detail in the legislation, but I assure you that the members of the Banking and Currency Committee and the Subcommittee on Housing, as well as the experts of the housing agencies and outside groups interested in the legislation, have considered every point carefully.

I believe that this bill will mark an important forward step in our housing and urban development legislation and will enable the country to embark on an intensive 4-year program to improve housing conditions and the physical environment of our communities in every part of our country and for all of our people. I am hopeful that the Members of the House will recognize the broad range of needs which this bill will meet and approve it as recommended by the committee by an overwhelming margin.

(Mr. BARRETT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HARVEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.
